THE STRANGE CASE OF COL. LABRADOR

FROM the days of Fernando VI. if not from an earlier period, it has been the custom in the Spanish naval service to demand that the officers who are to take part in a court-martial be present, first of all, at a religious service called "The Mass of the Holy Spirit." This is to prepare their minds and hearts for doing justice. Whilst a similar obligation has been removed from the officers of the land forces, for some inscrutable reason it has been left binding on officers of the navy.

Hence, the following incident, which occurred recently, and which may bring serious consequences to an honorable and upright officer, who has given two sons to the service of his country. One of his sons died in an early engagement of the last African war.

This officer is Don Juan Labrador, colonel of marine artillery, a Protestant, whose career has been something of a romance, owing to the difficulties he has been obliged to confront because of his religion. Promotion has been unduly delayed, many a vexation has he suffered, and many questions of conscience have perplexed him, when he saw simple privates boldly facing imprisonment because they would not bow the knee at mass. They, poor fellows, had been drafted into the service by conscription, and had no choice; he, on the other hand, had chosen the profession of arms, and thus, with his eyes open, had put himself in risk.

However, be that as it may, up to the present he has avoided direct collision with the Church of Rome. But now, after having, at great cost, and owing to his skill and acquirements, risen to the rank of colonel, and with the prospect of being made general within a few years and enjoying a general's pension on retirement, he is suddenly brought up by an incident that could hardly have happened out of Spain.

When appointed to San Fernando, and knowing that his new place exposed him to the risk of being obliged to attend the religious service which precedes a court-martial in the navy, and to kneel at the elevation of the host, he directed a special petition to the king, requesting to be exempted from the necessity of attending this service—but only the service—when there might be a court-martial in prospect. His petition was refused, and that with the more injustice when it is considered that the obligation to attend at a like service has been abolished in the land services of the crown; and also when it is remembered that the parliament has lately made a concession in the case of Protestant soldiers, allowing them to be absent from mass on Sundays at least.

Now comes the incident which concerns him and all Protestants, and perhaps in a special degree officers in government service, whatever be their religion. On Saturday, April 26, Don Juan received instructions to preside at a court-martial on the following Monday. He at once respectfully wrote to his superior officer that his religious convictions did not allow him to attend the mass. He was again ordered to fulfil his first instructions, and again declined. For this conduct on his part he was put under arrest, awaiting definite trial for disobedience to orders and a possible punishment of from six months to six years in prison.

What is feared is that, granted the fanaticism which prevails in this unhappy country, the officer in question may be imprisoned (with possible consequences which could not come about in other European countries), his family may be impoverished, and he may lose his due promotion and pension. He is well known in naval circles and among the Protestants of the peninsula, and his brother officers and civilians in San Fernando respect him. The writer also knows him, and writes this account from typewritten notes and a personal letter supplied by Don Juan, lest there should be any error in published facts. In the Spanish newspapers the facts have, perhaps without intention, been somewhat distorted.

It is his desire, and the desire of Protestants in Spain, that the facts in the case should be known, both for his protection and in order to procure a change in the military laws, so as to save others from punishment on account of their religion.

[The foregoing is a copy of the statement given of the case by an English minister in Spain.]

PRESBYTERIANS IN YEARLY SESSION

IT WAS an unprecedented event in the history of Presbyterianism when three assemblies met simultaneously in the city of Atlanta during the latter part of May. Altogether the delegates numbered approximately fifteen hundred, and the spirit of fraternity and good will was strongly marked throughout the days of deliberation. An awe-inspiring union service for communion was held on the great Baptist Tabernacle on the afternoon of May 16, and many union gatherings gave the commissioners from the various bodies an opportunity to unite in work and worship. Really all our Presbyterian bodies were represented at Atlanta during those great days, for while the assemblies of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, the Presbyterian Church in the United States (the largest Southern body of Presbyterians) and the United Presbyterian Churches were in session, the moderator and a number of clergymen of the Associated Reformed Church, the Southern wing of the United Presbyterian Church, came to Atlanta to attend the union sessions.

The Rev. John Timothy Stone, D.D., pastor of the Fourth Presbyterian Church, Chicago, was made moderator of the U. S. A. Assembly, the Rev. J. G. Lyons, D.D., pastor First Presbyterian Church, Louisville, Ky., moderator of the Southern Assembly, and Dr. Robert M. Russell, president of Westminister College, moderator of the United Presbyterian Assembly.

There had been some little misgiving about the feasibility of conducting the Northern and Southern Assemblies at the same time and place, and it was understood that no aggressive and official attempts would be made to further the cause of union between the two denominations. The spirit of Christian brotherhood was abroad, however, and while no positive action was taken a good foundation of confidence and esteem was laid. On the other hand, definite action was taken by the Southern Presbyterian Assembly and the United Presbyterians looking to an organic union of those bodies. Another important item of the deliberations was the decision of the Southern Assembly, by the decisive vote of 138 to 37, to remain in the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America. It had been feared that this body would withdraw from the council.

The Northern Assembly exonerated its board of church extension of charges of extravagance, but voted to discontinue the department on the country church. Sharp controversy raged over the matter of the relation of the Assembly to Union Seminary and a new committee of seven was appointed to deal with the situation and report in 1914.

No-Rim-Cut Tires 10% Oversize

Our 11% Reduction

No-Rim-Cut tires now cost, on the average, 11 per cent less than last year.

This is partly due to lower rubber, partly to our multiplied output.

It is all due to our policy of keeping our profits close to 8½ per cent.

Good News

This will be good news to motorists. After all the advances they have had to pay, it seems good to have something come down.

Rubber has come down somewhat. But fabrics and labor have advanced in the same time. The net saving on materials warrants a reduction of five per cent, we figure.

But our output has multiplied. Our new factories are completed, and equipped throughout with the latest labor-saving machinery.

We figure that No-Rim-Cut tires this year will cost us 11 per cent less than last year. And we give you this entire saving.

Three Savings

These new-type tires save you all the cost of rim-cutting. And that is what ruins 23 per cent of all the old-type tires.

GOODYEAR
AKRON, OHIO

No-Rim-Cut Tires
With or Without Non-Skid Treads

They save you by extra capacity. For No-Rim-Cut tires are 10 per cent larger than the same rated size in clinchers.

And now our mammoth output saves you 11 per cent on price.

No standard tires, even of old types, now cost less than these oversize tires which can't rim-cut.

King of Tires

No-Rim-Cut tires have come to outsell every other tire. The demand has doubled over and over. Our last year's sales by far exceeded our previous 12 years put together.

All because they saved tire users many times their extra price.

Now there is no extra price. There is no reason whatever why motor car owners should buy any lesser tire.

Write for the Goodyear Tire Book—14th-year edition. It tells all known ways to economize on tires.

Corns Ended Forever For 15 Cents

Please stop and consider.

The corns you are paring, and daubing, and doctoring can be ended forever in 48 hours. And without any discomfort.

Apply a little Blue-jay plaster, and the corn pain stops at once.

Then forget the corn. In two days take off the plaster and lift out the corn.

This is the only scientific way to terminate a corn.

It is so efficient that folks now use it on a million corns a month.

It is gentle and easy and comfortable. And Blue-jay does what nothing else will do. Try it on one corn.

A in the picture is the soft B & B wax. It loosens the corn.
B stops the pain and keeps the wax from spreading.
C wraps around the toe. It is narrowed to be comfortable.
D is rubber adhesive to fasten the plaster on.

ANSWERS TO FINANCIAL QUERIES

I. D. L., OHIO. You will be making a grave mistake if you borrow money with which to buy U. S. Steel common, even on a fifty-point margin. Steel is a highly speculative stock, subject in times of market activity to wide swings in price. There are few stocks on the list that afford the speculator a more uncertain venture. Don't buy any stock or bond you cannot fully pay for at the time of purchase, and especially keep out of marginal transactions.

J. C. W., WEST VIRGINIA. You need not feel embarrassed over the nature of your inquiry. Your lack of familiarity with Wall Street terms is shared by many other investors. 1. Convertible bonds are seldom secured by mortgages. They are usually debentures, and have the privilege of being converted into, or are exchanged for, stock of the issuing corporation at a fixed price. 2. Collateral trust bonds have grown out of the absorption of one company by another and are secured by stocks or bonds, usually stocks of the corporation which has been taken over. In addition to the collateral security, they are a lien against the credit of the issuing company. 3. Income bonds partake of more of the nature of a stock than a bond. The interest on them is payable only if and when earned, and foreclosure proceedings cannot be brought in case of a default of interest payments. 4. A closed mortgage is an issue of bonds all of which are outstanding. No more bonds can be issued under the mortgage securing them.

E. E. D., CONNECTICUT. You ask for an "absolutely safe" real estate investment. We cannot name any such investment unless it would be a mortgage on a piece of improved Hartford realty. It should not be difficult to secure a responsible borrower for your $5,000, for we are told that building operations are active in your city just at present, and that there is an active demand for money at 6 per cent. Real estate loans are not attractive, however, to many, and if you are not disposed to follow this suggestion you should put your funds into good bonds, yielding 6 per cent. or less. The following bonds are recommended as possessing the elements that should be present in a conservative investment:

Atchison General 4s at 93.
Baltimore & Ohio First 4s at 92.
C., B. & Q., Joint 4s at 94½.
Chicago & Northwest General 3½s at 80½.
D. & H. First and Refunding 4s at 96.
Illinois Central Refunding 4s at 91.
Northern Pacific Prior Lien 4s at 94.
Union Pacific First 4s at 96¼.

The above bonds yield on investment from 4.22 to 4.55 per cent., according to the issue. They can be quickly marketed.

M. E. W., MISSOURI. Cobalt Central stock is practically worthless. A few days ago ten thousand shares were reported sold at one mill per share. This is a tragic drop from 73c., which you state you paid for your stock during the boom. The Nevins firm, the former sponsors of Cobalt Central, were said to have "traded" in 30,000 shares a day on the Curb, boosting the stock from 30 cents to 77 cents. When the promoters stepped from under, the public had the bag to hold, just as the public always does with mushroom mining stocks.

DR. C. W. H., MAINE. Yes, Cities Service preferred may be considered a good speculation investment for a physician.

P. J., MONTANA. Great Northern Railway preferred has paid at the rate of seven per cent. since 1899. In 1906 this stock, including ore certificates, sold at $348, but sold during the same year ex-ore certificates at $178. No matter what the market is doing, once bought, Great Northern should be held. In the past prizes have been awarded; they may be again.

REV. A. W. D., NEW JERSEY. Erie common is far removed from the investment class. As an out-and-out speculation the stock presents attractive possibilities. But remember this: the first and second preferred stocks receive no dividends, and these issues must receive their share of profits before the common stock is paid anything. Before another winter sets in the entire Erie system between New York and Chicago will be double-tracked and then the earnings, already increasing, will be, it is expected, quite sufficient to pay dividends on both classes of preferred. If Erie continues to improve its traffic facilities to keep abreast of its rapidly expanding business, it is not idle presumption to expect dividends on the common stock at a time not so very far off, for once a rehabilitated railroad property as important as the Erie gets fairly started, it is surprising how quickly it soon passes into the first class, and its shares, once sneered at, become the market's leaders. Still, hopeful as we are of Erie's future, we consider the bonds more attractive than either of the three stock issues. We are especially attracted to Erie's General Mortgage Series "B" Convertible 4s. These bonds are now selling around 70 and yield at this price nearly 6 per cent. Not the least of the attractive features of these bonds is the fact that they are convertible into the common stock at $60 a share at any time before October 1, 1917.

MRS. D. B., OHIO. We have no information regarding the Lead Trust Mine. In the winter of 1906 the writer visited the Kootenai County and the Leroy mine, but fails to recall any property in the vicinity possessing a name even remotely resembling the name of the mine you have put your money into.

S. R. W., PENNSYLVANIA. While we are assured, by the inevitable spread of New York's population northward, that the now practically uninhabited tract known as Morris Park will become thickly settled and the lots offered at auction will increase many fold in value, we do not, however, recommend such long distance speculation to a person living in Pennsylvania. You should say no when tempted to buy real estate you have no personal knowledge of, will probably never see, and which attracts you merely as a speculation. Goodly profits eventually may be realized by the purchasers, but it will be those on the ground ready to take advantage of a favorable market.

REV. D. A., MAINE. Mr. Benjamin D. Haight, deputy superintendent of the Banking Department of the State of New York, has informed us that he hopes to make a payment of 10 per cent. to the Industrial claimholders in August, and he expresses belief that before the end of the next twelve months the claims will all be liquidated. If this hope is not realized it will be due to the fact that the assets of the company comprehend large tracts of suburban real estate, and a complete liquidation necessarily depends on the condition of the real estate market. This has not been good for many months, although improvement is noted.

MRS. A. L., NEW YORK. We do not know what became of the National Consolidated Oil Company or where the promoters are at present. The stock has no value whatever. You state that it seems too bad that corporations should be allowed to conduct swindles. Of course the majority of people who invest money in an enterprise that proves unsuccessful believe they have been swindled. Perhaps in the majority of cases there has been no real swindling. At the time the company you inquire about was promoted, hundreds of thousands of people were frantically endeavoring to invest in oil enterprises, and they bought millions of shares of oil stocks. There was a veritable craze of speculation. Hundreds of companies were formed by promoters who had perfectly honest intentions. If their enterprises had been successful they and their stockholders would have made money. A vast number of these enterprises proved failures, and the promoters and their stockholders lost. We presume that it was so in the case of the company that you invested your money in. The promoters probably believed that they had a good thing, but the oil production business proved to be a disappointing gamble.

G. D. D., NEW HAMPSHIRE. 1. We give no approval to the Telepost stock. It is one of the best things we know of to leave alone. 2. The Metropolitan Telephone and Telegraph Company's bonds receive the same classification. Leave both alone. The latter company was recently sued by the New York Telephone Company to compel the defendant company to stop using the name "Metropolitan," the name of one of the subsidiaries of the New York Telephone Company. The case was decided in favor of the New York Telephone Company and in the judge's charge to the jury the Sterling Debenture's "Metropolitan" Company was scored by the court for selling the unsuspecting public "bonds" which were backed by no appreciable assets and at best are of doubtful value.

NOTES ON THE CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR, EPWORTH LEAGUE AND BAPTIST YOUNG PEOPLE'S UNION TOPICS

National Glories and Perils*

AS ONE thinks of the United States perhaps the first thing that impresses itself upon the mind is the fact of its great strength. The stretch of its prairies, the depth of its forests, the breadth of its fields, the size of its cities, the height of its "sky-scrapers," the miles of its steel railroads, the roar of its factories and foundries and printing-presses, all these things mean strength. It is true that much that looks like strength in our daily living and working is in reality little else but nervous haste, but after all we are a nation of strong men, doing great tasks with vigor and speed.

With this glory of strength comes an accompanying peril. It may be called the peril of "self-will." Jehovah complained of his chosen people that as they became more prosperous they became more "stiff-necked." Strength is a dangerous gift. If a boy or a citizen has it, without having with it good principles of honor and kindness, he is dangerous. So a great and strong nation needs to learn humility along with its glory of strength. We must recognize that the business of life is not to have our own way or seek our own glory, but to submit ourselves to the requirements of duty. Our greatness as a nation will depend ultimately not on how much we can get for ourselves, but on how much we can do for the rest of the world.

Another of our nation's glories is its freedom. It cost a great deal; it is a priceless treasure. Yet with this possession of freedom, freedom from the dominion of other powers, freedom of assembly, and speech, and of the press, has come another peril—the peril of lawlessness. This is a special danger for our boys and girls. The old ideas of restraint and discipline are irksome. Children and young people, even of respectable homes, have an air of independence, and feel free to do and say things that would not have been thought of even a few decades ago.

Young America needs to learn again the joys of obedience. It is not necessary to break rules and laws to have a good time. Organizations like the Boy Scouts and Camp-Fire Girls are demonstrating how much fun can be had in accordance with strict rules and regulations.

This peril of lawlessness is especially great in business and political circles. It is very humiliating that our boasted national "freedom" has given rise to so much dishonor in these spheres. But it is also a cause for great thanksgiving that recent years have seen a marked change in this regard. We are beginning to learn again the use and the rights of conscience.

The most serious phase of this peril of lawlessness is its tendency to irreligion. Whatever we may be or become, if we cease to be a religious nation all the bright promise of our beginnings will be unfulfilled. The doom is fixed of "all the nations that forget God." It is good that Kipling's great Recessional has found its way into so many school and church song books:

> Lord God of Hosts, be with us yet,
> Lest we forget, lest we forget.

What our nation needs more than anything else is an old-fashioned, sweeping revival of religion. If you want to be good patriots, if you want to be worthy of the traditions and events we commemorate on the Fourth of July, pray and work and believe for a nation-wide revival that shall rouse the consciences of the people and turn them to God. Let the revival begin in your heart, in your society, in your church. It will begin somewhere. Why not with you?

Another glory is our wealth; and its accompanying peril is our greed. Something was said about this in the B. Y. P. U. lesson about American cities last week. Look up those paragraphs, and emphasize the thought here that greed is one of our deadliest national faults. It must be restrained and conquered and changed to kindness by the power of the Holy Spirit. The rights of the toilers must be recognized. We must come to see and feel that wealth mined from the privations and travail of our fellows is accursed wealth that will doom instead of bless us.

We have many added glories; we have many other perils. But these six will give us food for thought and prayer and should lead to fresh consecration to our nation's God and his plans for us—on Independence Day.

* "OUR NATION'S GLORIES AND PERILS." Christian Endeavor and B. Y. P. U. Topic for Sunday, June 29, 1913. Ex. 19: 1-8.

The Price of Power*

POWER is an attractive word. But power, like most attractive things, costs something. You cannot get steam power without consuming fuel and water. So you cannot get spiritual power without some kind of sacrifice. Whatever is to be changed into power or charged with power must be surrendered to the power. If a wire is to be transformed from a dead wire to a live wire it must be surrendered to the electrical power. It cannot be alive and dead at the same time; it cannot keep part of its length for itself and give part of its length to the power. It surrenders itself, and becomes mighty enough to move railway trains and the shuttles of a thousand looms.

Yet after all the word "price" hardly expresses the surrender. We do not pay God anything to get the power. Simon Magus made that proposition to Peter, and was furiously rebuked. True, he wanted to use the power of the Holy Spirit for selfish gains. But we must beware, in our longing for power, of falling into his error. We want the power for doing certain work and are apt to think we can pay for getting it. We cannot. We can only submit ourselves to it. It is like yielding oneself to the beauty of music or the splendors of the sunset or the majesty of the sea. The soul drinks in these glories as it allows itself to be captured by them. So the power of God will envelop us and fill us if we give ourselves up to it.

It is well, too, to remember that power is, after all, a secondary gift. It is sin in the soul that keeps the power out. If we seek purity we shall find it, and shall find power too. Faith is the connecting link. We trust the blood of Christ to cleanse us, and with the cleansing the power of the Holy Spirit comes upon us.

Truly wonderful are the promises of power. There is all we need. It has been purchased for us by the death of Christ. Can we hesitate any longer to surrender ourselves utterly to it?

* "THE PRICE OF POWER." Epworth League Topic for Sunday, June 29, 1913. Matt. 20: 20-22; Luke 9: 24; 5: 11; Mal. 3: 10.

ANSWERED PRAYERS

HERE is the account of another mother saved to her home through prayer: "I believe that God does answer prayer, for he has answered many for me. Last winter my mother lay at the point of death, and I prayed that she might live, and she recovered. If we pray with earnestness God will hear us. But we must remember to add 'Thy will be done.'"—A Reader, Greenfield, Mass. K. K., of Cincinnati, Ohio, writes: "I wish to acknowledge one prayer in particular. My sister was very ill; I wish to thank God for her recovery." Mrs. A. A., of Lowville, N. Y., writes: "I wish to acknowledge that God does hear and answer prayer. I prayed for a dear child that he would be restored to health, promising to acknowledge it in your paper, and I wish to do so. God has answered a great many prayers for me, for which I praise him."

Not only have prayers for health been answered, but prayers for other practical things as well. O. Y. writes from Tuscarora, Pa.: "God has heard and answered many of my prayers, especially one in which he has provided me with work." I. E. C., of Cleveland, Okla., writes: "I want to acknowledge God's goodness in answering prayer and helping me out of a great financial difficulty." W. R. J., of Massena, Iowa, writes: "With a grateful heart I wish to acknowledge answered prayer for the safe return of two loved ones who were traveling in a district swept by a severe storm." An old subscriber writes from Treadelphia, W. Va.: "With a grateful heart I wish to acknowledge God's goodness in answering my prayer for protection from a great calamity." Mrs. W. V. Stewart, of Huntingdon, Pa., writes: "I want to acknowledge the goodness of God in answering prayers for employment for my husband, and other things we were very much in need of."

Trouble does not always vanish in answer to prayer, but we may always receive grace to endure the trouble. Mrs. C. W. S. writes, from Chatham, N. Y.: "I can add my testimony to many others of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD readers that God does hear and answer prayer. My life has been full of trouble, but through prayer I have found peace." G. T. B., of New Bedford, Mass., writes: "I am a young girl seventeen years old, and God has answered my prayers many, many times. I want to testify for him."

T. McM. writes, from Boston, Mass.: "After continuing for some time instant in prayer about a matter which had been causing me unutterable sorrow and distress, the answer came as it always surely will to those who have the faith to say: 'I will not let thee go unless thou bless me.' I desire to thank God through the columns of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD."

Another old subscriber writes from Dover, N. H.: "For many years I have been an interested reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and have enjoyed its contents. The Answered Prayer column has been a source of comfort and strength to me. Many times have I tested God's promises and found him faithful. When the days have been particularly dark and sorrows threatened to overwhelm me my heavenly Father heard my cry, gave me strength and faith and brought me to brighter days."

Acknowledgments of answers to prayer have also been received from: F., Jonestown, Pa.; L. S. P., Belchertown, Mass.; Mrs. A. A. H., Ontario, Canada; Mrs. E. F. T., Garfield, Wash.; E. M. D., Galena, Kan.; A Reader, Sullivan, Ill.; A Reader, Falmouth, Ind.; A Reader, Franklin, Pa.; E. L. M., Hangchow, China; Mrs. M. E. S., California, Mrs. I. G. H., Plainfield, N. J.; A Reader, Sandusky, Ohio.; A. L. R., Ontario, Calif.; E. D. F., Lancaster, Wis.; A Reader, Norwich, N. Y.; Mrs. W. F. W., Burkumsville, Va.; M. S. H., South Braintree, Mass.; M. E. M., Cozaddale, Ohio; An Old Subscriber, Evans, Col.; A Reader, Detroit, Texas; E. O. D., Robinson, Kan.; Mrs. A. J. S., Lucknow, Ontario, Canada; A. B. D., Quincy, Ill.; A Reader, Huntsville, Ill.; Mrs. A. C., St. Clairsville, Ohio.

BEGAN YOUNG
Had "Coffee Nerves" from Youth.

"When very young I began using coffee and continued up to the last six months," writes a Texas girl.

"I had been exceedingly nervous, thin and very sallow. After quitting coffee and drinking Postum about a month my nervousness disappeared and has never returned. This is the more remarkable as I am a Primary teacher and have kept right on with my work.

"My complexion now is clear and rosy, my skin soft and smooth. As a good complexion was something I had greatly desired, I feel amply repaid even though this were the only benefit derived from drinking Postum.

"Before beginning its use I had suffered greatly from indigestion and headache; these troubles are now unknown.

"I changed from coffee to Postum without the slightest inconvenience, did not even have a headache. Have known coffee drinkers, who were visiting me, to use Postum a week without being aware that they were not drinking coffee."

Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Write for booklet, "The Road to Wellville."

Postum comes in two forms.

Regular (must be boiled).

Instant Postum doesn't require boiling but is prepared instantly by stirring a level teaspoonful in an ordinary cup of hot water, which makes it right for most persons.

A big cup requires more and some people who like strong things put in a heaping spoonful and temper it with a large supply of cream.

Experiment until you know the amount that pleases your palate and have it served that way in the future.

"There's a Reason" for Postum.

George Sherwood Eddy, world-wide traveler, student, and speaker in the cause of world evangelization, sounded the keynote of the convention in his opening address. In his judgment the questions to be considered were the most important in the history of the association.

Most important of these was the stand to be taken in defining the term "evangelical." The report of the "Commission of Fifteen," appointed at Washington six years ago to consider the evangelical tent, led to a long and earnest debate. The final resolution reaffirmed the demands made at the fourteenth international convention, held at Portland, Me., in 1869, defining "evangelical" as requiring an acceptance of the inspiration of Bible and of the deity of Jesus.

During the convention Hon. H. B. F. MacFarland, of Chicago, addressing the delegates on the subject "Recent Progress and Present Outlook on the North American Field," mentioned the work of Mr. Julius Rosenwald, of Chicago, for the colored men of this country. Mr. Rosenwald has offered a gift of $25,000 to every colored association that will in its own city raise $75,000. Dr. Walter Rauschenbusch, of Rochester, delivered a stirring address on "The Responsibility of the Association to Present-day Social Problems." Alexander Simpson, of Edinburgh, successor to Henry Drummond, brought greetings from the Scottish National Council and urged the delegates of the convention to always stand steadfast in the service of God.

One of the most important reports prepared by any commission for the convention was that on "The Relation of the Association to the Church." This report was read by Frank W. Sanders, president of the Washburn College, Topeka, Kan. After reviewing the history of this relationship since the organization of the Boston association in 1851, resolutions were adopted, among them the following:

"The most important agency for the promotion of religious life is the church. No other institution should be permitted to supplant it or to ignore its primacy. The association reaffirms its historic policy of absolute loyalty to the church, and reasserts its intention to recognize in all its activities the pre-eminence of the church, the extension of whose influence is the primary purpose of the association."

On Sunday afternoon there was a demonstration of evangelism in action. Notwithstanding the interruption in travel caused by the car strike, about 2,500 men assembled in Music Hall to hear George Sherwood Eddy. His subject was "The Greatest Question in the World," and he held the rapt attention of his hearers from start to finish. In clear and forceful language he told of the Gospel of Christ. "Neither wealth, nor love, nor power, nor influence can satisfy any one," he said, "unless God is with him." He gave numerous examples to prove his words and read a copy of a letter written by a woman in China shortly before she was beheaded for her faith.

Mr. Robert E. Speer in his address: "What Religious Message Should the Association Bring to Young Men?" declared that the answer is in two words: "The Gospel." Mr. F. S. Brockman, national secretary for China, closed the convention with a most graphic description of last year's famine in that country, but saying that to-day's famine is for the bread and water of life.

Dr. Ira Landreth, of Tennessee, characterized as "the man of many inches and every inch a man," was president of the convention. The gavel used was sent by George Fire Cloud, a full-blooded Sioux Indian of Montana, a member of the association. His message accompanying the gavel referred to his earlier days and declared that now it was his pleasure to send this gavel in the interest of peace and order.

Questions and Answers

T. L. R., Winston, N. C. As far as can be gathered, the story of the controversy over the body of Moses (mentioned in Jude 9) seems to have been based on a lost apocryphal book, mentioned by Origen and Fabricius. This dispute probably had reference to the concealment of the body to prevent idolatry, though some commentators, as we stated, have held otherwise. The nature of the bodies of Elijah and Moses, visible in the Transfiguration, cannot be conjectured, although they were doubtless spiritual bodies, rendered recognizable to the quickened spiritual sense of the disciples.

J. P. S., Tabor, N. C. 1. How much above sea level is the land surface of the Egyptian pyramids? 2. How far is the pyramid from the passage taken by the Israelites, when they left Egypt via the Red Sea?

Professor Edgar J. Banks of Harvard, to whom these questions have been submitted, answers: "1. The pyramids at Gizeh are scarcely above sea level. The Great Pyramid stands on a rocky ledge overlooking the Nile. I should think not more than forty or fifty feet above the river. I do not think Cairo is many feet above sea level, and the pyramids could not be more than fifty feet or so above the sea. 2. As I understand their route, the Israelites did not cross the Red Sea anywhere near the pyramids. The Land of Goshen, where they are said to have lived, lies almost directly between the Red Sea and the pyramid, and if their journey started from the Land of Goshen, which is forty or fifty miles east of the pyramid, they went directly away from it. If the journey started from the Nile, then it is possible that the pyramid was somewhere visible on the horizon in their rear."

C. D., New York. The repentant sinner who comes to Christ to seek forgiveness and cleansing, does not wait until he is clean and whole. He comes just as he is, without any plea save that Jesus died for sinners. Assuming his repentance to be genuine and his "turning away" from sin sincere, God's people will welcome him and strengthen and encourage him. Until he become strong and steadfast in the faith, he will be modest and unassuming in his new surroundings. With rare exceptions new converts should take only a humble position in church work. Consult your pastor and talk freely with him on all these matters. Give him your confidence, and abide by his advice.

Reader, Little Muddy, Ky. If the circumstances are as you describe, we would regard her as justified in taking any reasonable steps for her own protection and happiness. It is frequently the case, however, that people in such conditions are apt to magnify their troubles, and to imagine them far worse than they really are, when an earnest effort at reconciliation, with faith in God to bring matters right, might change the whole situation. Consult your pastor before taking any decisive step.

W. E. A., a reader of this journal (a traveling evangelist), now in Fresno, Calif., writes: "I want to thank THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for the favors of the past winter, and through it those who made it possible for me to distribute eight hundred copies of the New Testament. I gave away the last twenty last evening, and how thankful I am to the Lord for opening this channel, for nearly every one has gone into the hands either of some street lad, who never goes to Sunday school, or some man who never goes to church. The people who needed them most and who seemed to appreciate them most were poor folk."

E. C. B., Monroe, Wis. 1. David's mother's name is not stated, although some, by comparing various detached passages, have inferred that it was Nahash. 2. See answer to "Bereaved," on this page. 3. If the generally accepted view of recognition in the future life be correct, there would seem to be no reason to doubt that parents and children will know each other. As to other relationships, we can only conjecture.

Bereaved, Mossyhead, Fla. If we could answer all the questions that relate to the future life, we would be wiser than any mortal who has ever lived. God, in his wisdom, has seen fit to leave many things undisclosed here, which will be made plain to us by and by when the veil is lifted. We have the assurance of his holy Word, and the special assurance of Jesus himself, that the souls of the righteous are in safe keeping, and we must be content to leave all the rest with him. See John 14: 1-3; II Cor. 5: 1; II Tim. 1: 10; I Cor. 15: 35-57, and many other passages. Many books have been written on the subjects touched in your letter, but none give so much comfort as the old Bible itself, which tells us that our dear ones dying in Christ are safe with God. Recognition in the future life is clearly implied in various passages. See II Sam 12: 22, 23; the parable of Dives and Lazarus in the Gospel; Heb. 12: 1 and others. While we cannot know all, we have enough to assure us that God is far kinder than we can ask or think, that the future of all those who believe and trust in him is safe in his keeping. (II Tim. 4: 7.)

Mrs. M., Butler, Va. The appellation "Jew" is derived from the patriarch Judah, and was originally applied to all members of that tribe and also to subjects of the separate kingdom of Judah, in contradistinction to the seceding ten tribes, who retained the name of Israelites. During the captivity and ever since, the term "Jew" seems to have been applied indiscriminately to the whole race.

T. M., Enterprise, Ore. 1. Insurance actuaries, who compile comparative statistics of the duration of human life, prove by their tables that the average length of life has materially increased within a century. You can procure statistics by writing to some life insurance agent. 2. The "sons of God" (Gen. 6) are believed to have been the descendants of Seth, who were righteous and law-abiding, in contradistinction to the descendants of Cain, many of whom were given to idolatry and other forms of wickedness.

O. B. H., Wendell, Idaho. The annual drink bill of the United States for the year ending June 30, 1912 (according to figures compiled by the American Grocer), is estimated to cost consumers $1,888,527,914. Of this sum, $1,630,187,252 represents the retail cost of malt and spirituous liquors, and $258,340,662 non-alcoholic stimulants. The annual cost per capita was $9.37. During the year, the United States revenue from alcoholic beverages was $332,497,000, or 48.06 per cent. of the total revenue.

R. C. S., Gainesville, Ga. 1. We cannot advise without knowing more of the doctrine these men teach. What you state of it, however, is sound enough. 2. Women have a place in church work with important duties, but we do not believe it is in the pulpit.

AMERICAN AND JAPANESE FRIENDSHIP

BY WM. ELLIOT GRIFFIS, D.D., L.H.D.

Author of "The Mikado's Empire"; "The Hermit Nation"; "Japan: In History, Folk-lore and Art," etc.

IN THE very old days China built a great wall across northern Asia to keep out persons "ineligible to citizenship." Japan's bad repute, all over the world, for making rigid exclusion laws was within our memory. Now, when a section of our country is taking up the business where the Japanese left off, it is well to inquire what roots of friendship lie deeper than this recent manifestation. The good doctor is not always frightened by symptoms, but looks rather to the constitution of the patient. The true navigator regards the oceanic drift more than surface currents. The bonds uniting Japan and America are historical, economic, educational and Christian; while the fears of the terrible things that will happen, if we welcome freely the Japanese, are imaginary. Divine Providence, directing the course of civilization to move westward with the sun, has at last brought the ends of the earth together. To the Christian, as well as the scholar, there is no East and no West. This is God's world. The ocean, once a barrier, is now a highway. Both wires and wireless telegraphy have given us new nerves. Now we feel, one with the other. In old days a famine or a pestilence would sweep off millions in either Europe or Asia without the other knowing of it. So neither cared. Now, by God's help and through science, we are famine-breakers and we call "Halt" even to plagues that once traveled round the world. Only ignorance can now keep apart those who are mutually benefited by knowing each other.

Almost all the hard things told about the Japanese were also said about the Germans who came to Pennsylvania in the eighteenth, and again about the Irish who arrived in the nineteenth century. Yet how grandly both peoples have responded to their opportunity and enriched the American composite! In still older time Jews and gipsies bore the brunt of popular ignorance, yet the world now has room for both. Roger Williams and William Penn proved that the little Dutch republic was blessed of God for showing Christian tolerance and charity to many forms of religion. Today we thank God for the founders of Rhode Island and Pennsylvania and rejoice in the Hague Tribunal and Peace Palace.

Human nature is the same all over the world, and if there be any vital difference between the Japanese and the American varieties my nearly fifty years of knowledge of the Nipponese and Yankees have not enabled me to see just where it is. I find that they are both in awful need of divine grace.

On Japanese soil one will see in Perry Park at Shimoda, fronting Yedo Bay, where the peaceful armada from America anchored in 1853, an imposing monument. This granite monolith, inscribed in colossal letters of gold, tells how President Millard Fillmore's envoy landed there. and is a memorial of honor and gratitude. The Japanese "Friends of America Association" built it themselves, the Mikado subscribing a thousand yen. A society is already formed to rear a memorial to Townsend Harris, who excelled even Perry. Through his patience and Christian character, as much as by his negotiations, the gates, ajar in 1853, were in 1859 opened wider to commerce, American residence and missionaries. In Japan he is called "the Nation's Friend." Americans were happy in the choice, not only of their first servants in diplomacy, but of the first four great American missionaries, Verbeck, Hepburn, Brown and Williams. Besides being a man of extraordinary vision and practical ability, each one served nearly forty years. For a full decade they had virtually the whole country to themselves. Did the Japanese appreciate their labors? On Dr. Hepburn's ninetieth birthday the Mikado directed his ambassador to go in person to East Orange, N. J., to confer on the medical missionary a decoration of the Order of the Rising Sun. When Verbeck, trainer of statesmen, died on the soil, the Emperor sent five hundred dollars to his family and ordered two companies of the Imperial Guards to escort his body to the grave. The greatest men in the empire attended his funeral, the city of Tokyo deeded a burial lot, and his students have built his monument. The other two are remembered as makers of the New Japan, and by thousands as their teachers and spiritual fathers in God. Brown, the master educator, translator of the New Testament, founder of theological study and leader of "the intellectuals," has a name immortal in Japan. Five thousand secular helpers from foreign countries were invited by the Japanese to aid them with their advice and expert talents between 1870 and 1900. The majority were Americans. Besides being well paid, they have, to the number of several score, received decorations from the imperial government. The Japanese memory is long. Instead of a night of oblivion after "arigato" (thank you), and "sayonara" (farewell), these golden stars —jewels of gratitude—glitter in the sky of remembrance.

WAKASA, JAPAN'S FIRST PROTESTANT CHRISTIAN

The Americans established a national educational system, and about twelve hundred teachers from the United States have assisted. American missionary ladies began the education of native women and then the government followed, until now, thirty thousand public schools are open to girls as well as boys. The Woman's University—a flower that opened out of a Christian man's heart — the Peeresses' School, the Tokyo Woman's Normal School and hundreds of private schools tell Christianity's message to woman. None more than Japanese writers have acknowledged this. American financial, railway, telegraph, postal, express and telephone systems have been adopted and, we are bound to say, in some cases improved upon.

Even to catalogue the tablets, monuments, inscribed and embroidered expressions of gratitude and regard, or to show proofs of native appreciation of what Americans have done for Japan would require a booklet of no mean size.

We first invited, almost forced, the Japanese to come among us. Why? What was President Fillmore's motive in sending a squadron of ships and a letter to the Emperor of Japan? Read the letter and you will see that he wanted the country to be opened to commerce in order that California and the United States as a whole should be enriched. The Japanese did not ask us to come. They feared the "white peril," and prayed to all their gods against it; but we wanted their coal, silk, tea and gold. Almost by main force Uncle Sam pulled the reluctant hermit out of his seclusion. Then, naturally, there broke out within the empire a struggle between the progressives and conservatives. This meant for Japan the civil war and bloodshed of 1868, followed by political and social reconstruction.

AMERICAN AND JAPANESE FRIENDSHIP

Under the Townsend Harris treaty merchants flocked to the islands where, so long shut up from the world, Japanese gold was worth only four times as much as silver. At once Americans bought up the precious metal at the astonishingly cheap rate until the land was drained. One fool wrote out his demand in nine figures. The government took alarm, for prices rose and the poor were suffering. The Americans did that same awful thing with which "labor" now charges the Japanese, of "carrying the money out of the country." How dreadful! Many splendid fortunes were made. Some of our millionaires to-day rejoice that Nippon was opened, for even now the Japanese buy sixty per cent of all their foreign purchases from us. They want our cotton, petroleum, flour, machinery, and a hundred other things which Uncle Sam is glad to sell. Having previously bought millions of dollars' worth of war and merchant ships, munitions of war and agricultural implements from us, they sent, the very day after peace with Russia was proclaimed, orders for ten million dollars' worth of machinery.

There are some things Japan will never be able to produce in successful competition with the Americans, and most of these are just those very things which we can supply. As for the old stories about the Japanese being "cunning," "tricky," "dishonest," and unable even to keep securely and count correctly their own money, being obliged to employ Chinese confidential clerks to do this—these are about the same order of trustworthiness as were the old anti-missionary stories.

Judge the Japanese as individuals, and you will have the same experiences as in dealing with particular persons of any other country. Judge them as a nation, and history will explain why the average Japanese reputation may not yet have arisen to the level of the Chinese. It is only since 1872 that the merchant in Japan has had social standing. The first native traders in the seaports, usually of the lowest class, were not shining examples of honesty. The initial banks established were by Englishmen from China, who employed the Chinese clerks to whom they had long been used. Travelers around the world had their letters of credit cashed and the money handed to them by Chinese. These banks were English, and not Japanese. Hence the silly stories, which mislocated and belated. Japanese banks, on our models, which did not exist until later, do not employ and never have employed Chinese clerks or paying tellers —all assertions to the contrary notwithstanding. Not one is to be found in the five thousand Japanese banks.

It would mean commercial disaster for both the Americans and the Japanese to be so foolish as to hate instead of loving each other.

Yet even intelligently selfish, as well as strong altruistic bonds of affection are not necessarily those based on material interests. Can anything be more touching than the relation of the grateful student to the faithful teacher? Judging by my own experience, gratitude is far from being an unknown quantity in the Japanese mind. To Siebold, the great German of ante-treaty days, they have reared five memorials. To Englishmen there are busts, statues, tablets, possibly a score in number. When we think of the tens of thousands of grateful pupils who gladly own their intellectual debt, who in their churches and schools keep in honor the portraits, or in their learned books make dedication, acknowledgment or reference to Americans who have helped them, one must feel that the Japanese are much like ourselves, especially when we are at our best. It is a fact undoubted that they who have longest known these people like them best. Is it strange that those most altruistic in serving or helping the Japanese are unanimous, or nearly so, in their high regard? Even those who see clearly their real faults have wonderful power for good over them.

It is not between the living only that an invincible bond unites the two peoples. From hundreds of graves of the Mikado's people on our soil, and of our dead in Japan, there issue influences which make for national affection. How striking is that picture in Hamlet, where a word issues from the grave—"Swear, swear." So to us these voices call now to keep good faith. From the sculptured tomb of a great French philosopher arises a hand holding a torch, while Holy Scripture tells of one who "being dead yet speaketh." These are but symbols of a real bond gripping two nations, which, by the indications of Providence, seemed destined to be united in mutual interests.

Nor can the scholar forget the ethical claims. Whatever the ignorant, indifferent, or selfish may say or suggest, he who has read carefully Japan's ancient records, studied the language, art, and antiquities, not only thinks, but knows — for the evidence is overwhelming—that the Japanese are a mixed race. That they have in them Tartar and Malay blood no one doubts. It is certain, also, that the blood of another of the most gifted of races, the Semitic, flows in their veins. Apart from the testimony of language, history records that colonies of Semitic stock settled in the islands. As for the Aryan strain in the Japanese, it is very rich, and possibly even the greatest. Language, mythology, tradition, all show the Ayran infusion of words, ideas and blood. The names of the mountains and the rivers teli of the first inhabitants, who were the Ainu, and who are of Aryan blood. A remnant of these white savages, numbering over fifteen thousand souls, yet remains. They speak a language allied with those of Europe. Their faces, features, eyes, beards and mental processes are exactly like our own. No one versed in even the rudiments of ethnology but realizes there is no such thing as a perfectly pure or unmixed race on the face of the earth. Yet it is beyond question that the nearer we are to foreign peoples in blood and descent, the easier it is to understand them, and the more rapidly are repulsions softened.

That the lower class Japanese, who have emigrated, are apt to show marks of degeneracy is quite true. I have no doubt that thousands of the people of Nippon, when away from home, free from their own social restraints, and missing the universal atmosphere of politeness of Japan, become slovenly and careless in foreign lands. More likely, however, are others of their people to adapt themselves to our ways very easily. Herein is something for us Americans to consider. We ourselves know well that "assimilation" is both upward and downward. The "white" man from southern Europe is only too apt to learn all the American varieties of villainy and scouldrelism and add them to his own. In becoming assimilated many end in degradation, increasing our taxation and swelling the ranks of our criminals. Others, again, from the first moment of their arrival, seem to select and adopt all that is best in American life. On the contrary, the Chinese, as a rule, neither rises or sinks. He makes little claim on our charities, nor does he adopt our customs. In the past he has remained pretty much about the same, hoping only to remain a Chinese. Nevertheless, we are happy to know many exceptions to this rule, and mainly for the better, with some for the worse. Yet, in the main, we may say the Chinaman does not greatly change by coming to America, and the reason is plain. He belongs to an old nation and is himself an ancient type of man.

But the island nation is young. The Japanese people is of the same age as the English people, who, blended of many stocks, came to national consciousness, as the race of to-day, only after the Norman conquest; that is, after the twelfth century—which is the same era as that in which the Japanese islanders had became one people. With all the faults of a young race, and all the promise of one. the Japanese abroad affects good clothes and aspires to a high social condition. Or he makes Americans disgusted with him on account of his slovenly ways and habits. Neither the saloons, nor our criminal courts, nor our almshouses see many Japanese.

I believe that, the opportunity being given of becoming a citizen, a Japanese, especially if caught young, will make as good an American citizen as the average. The purely local objections against him will, in time, pass away. All their history shows that the Japanese are the most improvable of the races of Asia. They will certainly make better citizens of our republic than the degenerates. anarchists and ne'er-do-wells, the riff-raff of all Europe, that has been thrust upon us. To allow the negro from Africa, even though of the lowest grade and fresh from savagery, to enter our gates and to keep out the Japanese, seems the height of absurdity. In truth, both science and religion call upon us to decide what a "white" man is.

It is especially in the Christian sphere that the Japanese and Americans respect, like, enjoy each other and find real basis for friendship. God cannot change, the Scriptures do not, the Holy Spirit is as active as ever, and Christians find that for the communion of saints, it is as in St. Paul's day. There is neither Jew nor Greek. Just who are the "barbarians" and who are the "Scythians," who are the civilized and who the uncivilized is not for me to say, or define the terms. When I first saw the Japanese in Philadelphia in 1860 I felt sure that whatever else they were, these strangers were not barbarians.

Already there are nearly a quarter of a million nominal Christians in the empire. In hundreds of Christian churches in Japan, Korea, Manchuria, China, Hawaii and the United States, the Japanese and Americans meet together, more or less. One sees in the changes of the individual heart and life how powerful the Gospel is, not only in helping our Japanese friends to reach a high standard of Christian character, but to show us that we Americans have not all the gifts and graces of the Christian.

Personally, I believe the Japanese contribution to our common Christianity will be very rich, manifested especially in the twofold gift of art and loyalty. In time they will furnish the best illustrated edition of the Bible, in which the wonders, the glory and the charm of nature and the life of animals, insects and flowers are to be depicted as never before. As they have excelled for a thousand years in the cultivation of loyalty, they will adorn this doctrine, also, of loyalty to Christ, in a pre-eminent manner.

So both at this time and always, may it be our prayer and hope that the missionaries who have gone out to preach the truth that we have all one Father and that we are his children, without regard to color or race, will not have to explain away or recall their message. As patriots we trust that Americans, who have throughout the world heralded the doctrine that "all men are created equal," will not have to eat their words. If the cry of "America for Americans" must be raised, let it be at least in the language and accent of the first founders of the American republic.

503 NEW MEMBERS IN A SINGLE DAY

A PENNSYLVANIA METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH MAKES A HISTORIC RECORD

A PANORAMIC PHOTOGRAPH OF THE NEW MEMBERS OF THE CENTRAL METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH OF WILKESBARRE, PA.

ON SUNDAY morning, April 27, Rev. E. E. Helms, pastor Central M. E. Church, Wilkesbarre, Pa., received 503 members into the church. Among these were 17 men between 70 and 80 years of age, and 104 young men between 18 and 25. The pastor writes to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD: "So far as I have been able to discover, this is probably the largest number ever received into any one church at one service in the history of America. The following Sunday I received 124 more, making 627 for the two Sundays, which I doubt not is also historic. The two Sundays following we added 78 more, making a grand total for the month of 705. I am sending you a photograph of the 503 who were received at the first service. This picture was taken on a week-day afternoon, when a number of men, for business reasons, were unable to be present." THE CHRISTIAN HERALD would be glad to learn from its ministerial readers of any other church which has a record number of membership additions on a single day.

IS EVANGELISM DYING OUT?

ANOTHER SERIES OF PITHY LETTERS FROM EVANGELISTS IN WHICH VITAL QUESTIONS ARE DISCUSSED WITH UNUSUAL FRANKNESS

Some of the Weaknesses of Modern Evangelism

IS EVANGELISM dying out?" I beg to emphatically say, No!

"Does evangelism pay?" It is owing to the character of the "evangelism." Much that goes in its name to-day is sailing under false colors, and to this is due in a large measure the justness of recent criticism.

Clear distinction should be made between "the old-time note" of a modern evangelist and the "lost chord" in some of the so-called professionalism of to-day. Both the preaching and work of too many of the men who have in late years entered the evangelistic field are entirely too superficial. And then too much fuss is made by the critic about methods of advertising, the feature of remuneration, etc., and too little insistence is made upon piety in the man, power in the message, and thoroughness in dealing with the converts.

For the last mentioned weakness many pastors are as responsible as some of the evangelists, for they have often been satisfied with additions to their church through the increasingly popular method of merely having converts take the front seats and sign up their church preference rather than to encourage the evangelist to deal more thoroughly with the enquirers.

Real evangelism is not dying out. The people want the Gospel, and we are finding them hungry for it. No evangelist need lower the tone of his message or method to get the ear and heart of the people. I believe that the problems of modern evangelism can be solved by the evangelists themselves at the Winona Conference, if the officers of the Interdenominational Association of Evangelists will take the matter up. Personally, I do not believe that the federated plan advocated by some is going to relieve the real difficulty. It will merely shift the problem.

My suggestion is twofold: First, let Dr. Biederwolf and others in charge of the evangelistic conference at Winona this year devote the sessions to a thorough examination into and discussion of the difficulties involved, getting at them from the inside. Second, let the religious papers of the nation begin a campaign of insistence upon thoroughness in the after-meeting. HENRY W. BROMLEY.

Wilmore, Ky.

Some Reasons Why Evangelists Are Discredited

THE reason why evangelists are discredited in some sections to-day must be laid at the door of a class of men who are aping sensationalists in methods, language, etc.; and their effort to copy methods of speech and in money-raising is so apparent that good people are disgusted and become so prejudiced against revival efforts that it is almost impossible to convince them that there is such a thing as sane evangelism.

These are about the only men doing evangelistic work to-day in America who can be rightfully accused of commercialism. I know of many consecrated men who are doing this work who are getting barely enough to live on. And these are men, too, who are doing a great work for the kingdom of God, who do not receive much advertising in the daily press or in the church press, but who are winning thousands of souls to Christ every year and are a great help to the pastors in whose churches they labor.

The federation suggested by Dr. Biederwolf would be all right provided it would accomplish what he advocates; but the probability is that the men who are abusing this holy office would be the first to thrust themselves into such an organization, as they would see in it a means of advertising themselves, and the purpose of the organization would be at once frustrated.

I am inclined to think that the matter must eventually come back to the churches, and that each denomination must refuse to allow any but the most trusted, efficient, and spiritually minded men to go into the field to do evangelistic work—men who have demonstrated in the pastorate that the Holy Spirit has called them to do this work. Then the irresponsible and unequipped man will not be accepted by the churches.

As it is now, the evangelist is not always to blame. Many pastors take no pains to discover whether a man is responsible and capable before employing him. Indeed, some pastors will pass by the man who is trying to keep evangelism on a high New Testament basis, such as will appeal to thoughtful people, and will select as a helper the man notorious for doing sensational things and getting off crude jokes. The ideal of many pastors seems to be to "get the crowd." J. W. MAHOOD.

Evangelism Itself Needs a Revival

I AM glad Dr. Chapman has written his letter to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. It gives new hope for true evangelism.

I love the church and reverence such blessed men as Dr. Chapman.

The church should guard against objectionable methods and secure evangelists who are fishing for souls and not for lucre.

God speed the day when the field of evangelism shall be revived, and when all shall realize it is not by might nor power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord. THEODORE M. HOFMEISTER.

Mount Vernon, Ohio.

The Right and the Wrong Kinds of Evangelism

IS EVANGELISM dying out? Yes and no! Yes! The kind in which the human element is conspicuous, as seen

First—In the motive—where God's honor and glory are not dominant. We must fill our pews and coffers and increase our membership in order to maintain or save our reputation.

Second—In the methods. Doing all sort of claptrap and sensational things to attract attention and draw a crowd, and ministering to the vanity of saints and sinners.

Third—In the matter, substituting for God's infallible Holy Word the opinions of men—seeking to entertain and amuse, and appealing to the lachrymals. This kind of evangelism is dying out; and the sooner it is buried beyond the hope of resurrection, the better. Many pastors are largely to blame for this sort, as they have invited it and put a premium upon it.

No! The kind of evangelism that is Scriptural and sensible, in which God's honor and glory are the supreme motive, the Holy Spirit the Agent, the Bible the means, saved men and women the instruments, in answer to prayer, that appeals to the intelligence and conscience—this kind of evangelism may not be very popular just at this time, a time of alarmingly prevalent unbelief, but it will not die out while sin scars and damns, while hearts ache and break, while the fires of hell burn and the unfading glories of heaven invite, and such evangelism was never so much needed as now. L. W. MUNHALL.

Germantown, Pa.

Will the Evangelistic Tide Rise Again?

IF EVANGELISM is dying out then the church is dying out. The church was born in a revival, the revival of Pentecost. There is more interest in evangelism in the church to-day than ever.

That it is harder to-day to do evangelistic work than it has been in many years is true; but it is true also that it is harder to do any kind of religious work. We are living in days when men are mad in money-making and money-spending, and so it is harder to turn their attention to spiritual things. But this makes the need of evangelistic effort the greater. We are living in an age of specialization. Why is it an unreasonable thing that men should specialize in spiritual work? Every pastor, Sunday school teacher, yes, and every Christian ought to be a winner of souls, yet the evangelist may sometimes be used to reach those who cannot be reached by the ordinary means of the church.

That there is a good deal of prejudice against the professional evangelist at this time is true. There is a process of ebb and flow in the religious tide as in the tides of the ocean. The tide may be out, but it will surely come in again. God has used the evangelist in the past, and I am sure he will use him again.

If sometimes the evangelist employs methods that seem to be strange, sensational, perhaps extravagant, that does not prove that God has not called him, or will not use him. William A. Sunday does some things that I could not do, and some that I would not do; but I have a profound admiration for the man and great respect for his work. Evidently God blesses his methods whether I like them or not, and I dare not depreciate the work of one who is leading souls to Christ. EDGAR E. DAVIDSON.

CHRISTIAN JOY AND SORROW

A SERMON

BY W. H. T. DAU*

TEXT: "A little while . . . and ye shall see me . . . and your sorrow will be turned into joy." John 16: 16, 20

SIX years ago there was running in a Sunday supplement of a St. Louis daily newspaper a serial story, the main purpose of which was to show what would happen in this world of ours if the resurrection of Christ were proven a falsehood. The author of this piece of fiction narrated how a British scientist had gone to the Holy Land to make explorations near the tomb of Jesus. His research was alleged to have led to the discovery of a plate bearing an inscription to this effect: "I, Joseph of Arimathea, took away the body of Jesus, and hid it." (The story was afterwards dramatized, and staged at the Odeon Theater in Paris, France, on Good Friday night, 1907.)

The author depicted the appalling effects that were produced when the news of the discovery of the tablet were telegraphed to Europe. When the full significance of the discovery dawned on the people, the churchless masses and the multitude of nominal church-members quickly proceeded to throw off every moral restraint that had held the beast in them in leash. "The Bible is a myth! There is no divine Christ! No resurrection! No judgment! We shall not be held to account for our actions! Let us eat and drink and be merry!" As these shouts went up in a frenzy of animal delight, indescribable orgies of vice began to be enacted. All the safeguards that had been thrown around virtue were swept away in a mad onrush of lust. Life and property were no longer safe. Decency and order had vanished.

On the other hand, unutterable sadness settled on the Christian communities. Churches remained closed. Preachers resigned their commissions, because they felt that they had no longer any message of real importance to a world of sinners. The dying perished without a word of cheer, or a ray of hope. Infants remained unbaptized; children uninstructed in the ways of the Lord. Christianity was dying of a broken heart. This state of affairs continued until another report was published, stating that the discovery had been a deception perpetrated by designing men.

Which Joy and Sorrow?

The significant part of this presentation of fictitious events was that the same news which brought unbounded joy to some caused unspeakable grief to others. The story dealt with events that were altogether imaginary. However, the possibilities which it opened up to men's view are real enough. They are all recognized in our text. This text is full of the two ideas of joy and sorrow. At one time the Lord says: "The world shall rejoice." At that time the disciples shall "weep and lament." At another time he says to the disciples: "Your heart shall rejoice," and he leaves us to infer what will be the state of mind of the worldly.

There are two kinds of rejoicing. Which of these shall be yours depends entirely on your relation to Christ. There are also two kinds of sorrow, and again, your relation to Christ determines which of the two shall be yours. There is a Christian, and an Antichristian, joy and sorrow. The cause and character of either becomes plain from what the Lord says about this matter.

When our Lord spoke these words, his life was entering the shadow of the cross. "A little while," he says to the disciples, "and ye shall not see me, because I go to the Father." This announcement at once starts anxious inquiries among them. "Did you hear what he said? What does he mean?" The import of his words is so ominous that they do not trust themselves to utter their thoughts outright. They dread to have their fears verified. Jesus notices their perplexity, and repeats his statement. He now adds the further announcement that his departure will be the signal for unconcealed delight to the world, while his disciples will be well nigh reduced to despair.

Christian joy rests on the fact that we have Jesus present with us. Christian sorrow starts with the belief that we have lost him. Turn the case around, and you have Antichristian joy, or sorrow.

We know what happened a few hours after the Master had spoken these words. Before the cock had crowed twice that night, he and his followers had passed through Gethsemane, and to the disciples it seemed that all was over with the cause they had espoused. Their Master was in the hands of his enemies, and his friends were fleeing apace. While most of them were running for their lives, Peter was lying to save his life. When the morning dawned after that night of terror, the streets of the holy city, which had rung with hosannas to the Christ a few days before, were echoing with the murderous shouts: "Crucify him!" It does not require a great stretch of imagination to picture to ourselves the smile of satisfaction that has overspread the faces of the Jewish highpriest and of the hierarchy, as they hustle the Galilean prophet away to Pilate. How the rich and proud citizens of Jerusalem may have looked sneeringly on, while the culprit Jesus was marched through the streets! Then came Gabbatha, and the humiliating dickering of justice with malice, the cruel sport of Herod's courtiers, the coarse buffooneries in the soldiers' hall, the horrid frolics on Golgotha, when they stood beneath his cross, yelling in mad joy: "Aha, what a fine fellow you are! Why do you not come down from the cross?"

The Modern Crucifixion

We have in these events a portrayal of scenes in the history of the church in all ages, of scenes in the lives of individual Christians. Ever and anon the Christ-hating forces in this world have had their brief day of jubilation and triumph. It was thus when the Roman Cæsars were slaughtering the Christians, when the Mohammedans overran Eastern Europe, when the saints of Christ fell dying beneath cruel swords on the hills of Savoy, near the tide-waters of the North Sea, and in many other lands. In our day the world is ringing with the victorious shouts of infidel science. In far-famed seats of learning, in the secular press of nearly every country, in countless societies, they are tolling the death-knell of the Bible, and of the Christ of the Bible.

These are prominent and very public instances. There are others. Christ is the ribald song of the taverns; his teaching is traduced in the drama, printing presses are groaning under the burden of blasphemy against his holy name. Unnumbered multitudes are deluding themselves with the belief that Christianity is a dead issue, and that men may sin as they list.

While these events were, and are, transpiring, the disciples have been buried in grief and shame. Two thousand years ago they were gathering in subterranean caverns at the dead of night, to whisper to each other His blessed name, and to study his life-giving Word. They were pining later in sadness and solitude, when the hand of the inquisitors was upon them. In our own day there is many a student leaving his school heartbroken because there they took out of his heart the Christ of his childhood, the Saviour of his youth. Many a Christian's heart is bowed with grief, because of the havoc which infidelity has wrought with the faith and morals of his dear friends.

The Restoration of Christ

This is the triumph of Antichrist. The forces who are determined that Christ, his Book, his Church, shall not have sway among men, are having their little while of rejoicing. Their seeming success may shake the faith even of tried and true disciples. The frightful specter of doubt and skepticism looms large in the lives of God's children. The constant offenses which surround them threaten to take Christ, and the verity of his Gospel, and the sustaining power of his Word entirely out of their lives. There is an agony of unspoken grief engulfing them, a pain tugging at their heartstrings, at times, that would startle us, if it could be spread out to our gaze. Christ is passing—has passed—out of their thoughts and affections, and the gloom of unforgiven sins is settling on their accusing consciences.

But this rejoicing of Antichrist is all an ephemeral show. "Again a little while," the Lord says, "and ye shall see me. Your sorrow shall be turned into joy. Your heart shall rejoice, and your joy no man taketh from you."

A flash on Easter morning. The grave opens. White-robed messengers from heaven take up their station at its awful mouth. Dazed soldiers are rousing themselves out of a sudden stupor, and scamper off panic-stricken to the city. There is a hurried meeting of the Jewish church dignitaries. "Hush! Do not tell it aloud! If you must say anything at all, lie that his body was stolen." Oh what a catastrophe! But the news is out. Women are hurrying into the city with the wonderful tidings. Peter and John are off for his tomb. And there he is himself, the Christ, and his sweetly solacing greetings: "Peace be with you!" falls like a heavenly benediction on their drooping spirits, as the dew of a May morning revives a parched flower. Can it be true? Oh, yes, it is. Angels and men are joining in pointing out the evidence of his return. And now there goes up a shout of joy throughout Jerusalem and Judea and Galilee. Craven disciples are becoming dauntless heroes. Crestfallen, confused, cowed, abashed, the forces of Antichrist are lapsing into a state of sullen, spiteful, impotent rage, while the story of the living Christ is making conquests every day throughout Asia and Europe.

These events, too, have been duplicated in the life of the church and of individual Christians. The blood of the martyrs who perished at the cruel orders of the Roman Cæsars and governors from Nero to Diocletian proved the seed of the new faith. From its ordeal of woe Christianity rose stronger than it had been before, and its very executioners became its loyal confessors. When toward the close of the Middle Ages the mystery of iniquity that had arisen in the church had reached its height, God brought in the Reformation. The children of Christ again began to sing the songs of salvation in ever-swelling chorus in many lands, because the lost Gospel, the absent Christ, was restored to them.

Nor do we fail to note evidences in our day that the tables are being constantly turned on the forces of doubt and denial of the saving truths of Christianity. God everywhere raises up witnesses for the power of his Son's blood, shed for the remission of men's sins—witnesses, who testify with convincing force that the Christ who seemed dead is still a living issue in this world. Braggart infidels are being constantly hushed when redeeming love dons the panoply of inspired truth, and steps forth to challenge their false assertions.

The Triumph

True, these ordeals are to the child of God no pleasant pastime while they last. Christian sorrow is a deep, and strong, and keen pain. But it is a healthy sorrow. Its issues are glorious. In this sorrow there is life, not death; hope, not despair. Though tossed with many a tempest, many a doubt, imperial Salem, the church of the living God, and her individual children rise from each paroxysm of grief, from each hour of despondency, with a clearer vision of faith, with firmer resolve to cling to the consolations of the Redeemer's Word, with more buoyant hope that the day is dawning rapidly when the Christ who is now attesting his unseen presence to the heart of every believer by his Word, by the ordinances of his church, and by the silent testimony of his Holy Spirit, will come to see us again in celestial glory.

We are singing our songs of rejoicing now sotto voce, as it were, in an undertone, perhaps in subdued whispers, because we are still in sin and pain, and our birth to the life that really deserves to be called life in the fullest sense, our birth unto eternity, is not yet effected. But even the feeble hosannas of Christ's little flock are sufficient to drown the Babel of infidel voices that are shouting around us: "We will not have this man to rule over us." Let them shout and rage. Theirs must be a short-lived triumph, and their joy will always prove a cheat. Alas! for them is coming their day of weeping, and lamentation, and gnashing of teeth. 'Tis only a little while. The mills of God's justice grind slowly, but they grind with exceeding care. Even the seeming tardiness of God in working the deliverances of his children is regulated by his unerring counsels of mercy, and in the end will be seen to have been marvelous haste.

Then, when the Lord comes entirely back to us, when we shall see him descending in his cloud-chariot, when a new sun shall rise, never to set any more, over the pinnacles of the eternal city of God, the song of the home-coming pilgrims as they enter Salem will rise in loftiest melody, and merge with voices of angels and the congregation of the first-born in the victorious acclaim: "Worthy is the Lamb that was slain to receive power, and riches, and wisdom, and strength, and honor, and glory, and blessing." Yes, a little while.

WHAT IT MEANS TO SAVE A CHILD*

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON BY DR. AND MRS. WILBUR F. CRAFTS

FROM the cradle of Moses, the imperiled foundling, born a slave under sentence of death, who was to grow up to be the greatest of mortals, the world's law-giver, the chief prophet of Jews, Christians and Mohammedans, heaven's delegate to the transfiguration-coronation of Christ, with whose divine name that of Moses alone of human names was to be linked in heaven in "the song of Moses and the Lamb," let us learn what it means to save a child.

You are thinking perhaps that the babies born in our times are not in any such danger of early death as Moses and the Hebrew babies of his day. But have you not heard that in the United States a third of a million babies die before their first birthday, and thirty of every hundred before their fifth birthday? The case is just about as bad in Great Britain, Australia and many other lands. This infant mortality is a far greater "slaughter of the innocents" than Herod's or Pharaoh's, and far less excusable, for we live in a better day. One ignorant father when asked about the death of his baby boy, replied: "The doctor said he died of the neglect." He thought that was the name of a disease, and it does kill more than any disease. The "neglect" begins when parents and teachers "neglect" to train their boys and girls to become strong both physically and morally, just as young men train for Olympic games or other athletic events.

The Hebrew children that were born shortly before the massacre period of our lesson were doomed to child labor, which either kills the child or makes it a weakling unfitted for life's responsibilities. I very much doubt if the labor required of Hebrew children in Egypt was as unhealthy as that of our Southern cotton mills and Northern canneries and mines, for the work in those days was mostly above ground and out of doors. There has been some mitigation of the child slavery of old England and New England since Mrs. Browning wrote her mighty imprecatory psalm, "The Cry of the Children," but in our age, when increased wealth and labor-saving machinery and the plan of "mothers' pensions" has removed the last excuse for substituting labor or business for both education and play in the lives of the children, not only the manufacturers and merchants, but parents scarcely less, need the blistering protest of the great prophet-poetess:

How long, how long, O cruel nation,
Will you stand to move the world on a child's heart;
Stifle down with a mailed heel its palpitation
And tread onward to your throne amid the mart?

Sentiment against child labor seems to be mainly sustained on pity for "the poor little things who have to work so hard." But if there were nothing in child labor except the toil of it, it would be hard to keep up a steady and rational movement against it. The profound peril of child labor, which makes the fight against it a patriotic necessity, is its awful bequest of inefficiency to the manhood, womanhood, and childhood of the next generation.

The most wonderful thing done by the tactful, heroic mother, Jochebed, in our lesson story was not hiding a baby from the police for three months, but hiding enough truth in his heart in the three years she had to train him for God before she must turn him over to Pharaoh's daughter to be educated by idolaters, and associated with vicious princes, to make him refuse long after to desert his enslaved people or give up the true God even for the crown of the world's greatest empire of that day. "By faith Moses, when he had grown up, refused to be called the son of Pharaoh's daughter, choosing rather to suffer affliction with the people of God than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season, esteeming the reproach of Christ greater riches than the treasures of Egypt, for he had respect unto the recompense of reward. By faith he forsook Egypt, not fearing the wrath of the king; for he endured as seeing him who is invisible." (Heb. 11: 24-27.) This may seem to be getting ahead of our lesson, but it is necessary to go so far at least to measure the influence of what his mother taught him of his duty to God and his duties to man in the first three years of his life. There is nothing to show that he got any teaching about the true God after the three years he was left in his mother's care up to the time God spoke to him from the burning bush. What Jochebed was able to do in three months before Christ came and before the Bible was written should startle parents by way of contrast with the very little that most of them are doing to fortify their children for life in those wonderful years of first impressions. A child of two and a half, returning from his first day at church, being asked what he had learned, said with a reverent upward look, "God, God, God." He had learned more of reverence than many learn in a lifetime.

One of the writer's own flock in New York joined the First Union Presbyterian Church on his own motion in 1884, at five years of age, after one of the most thorough and satisfactory examinations any one ever passed. His answers were taken down and they show clearly that the essentials of religion may be taught in the first five years of life when father and mother and teacher put forth real effort.

In a Hindu house, the home of three brothers and their wives, their sons and sons' wives, and several grandparents, in all more than fifty persons, the gladdest person of all the company was a little dark-eyed girl of five years of age, who went daily to a mission school. Though her father and brothers were bigoted Hindus, nothing was done to prevent her from attending the mission, where she learned to read verses from the Bible. But when she was eight years of age she was considered too old, according to the customs of the country, to go out of the zenana, and so her daily trips to the mission ended. Shut in her home, with a Testament, which she had received as a prize, she was accustomed to "play school" under a wide veranda with her sisters and brothers and cousins, who had a great admiration for her superior education and were delighted to repeat after her texts of Scripture whose full meaning they did not at first understand, such as "God so loved the world," and "Jesus said, I am the way, the truth and the life." The two best scholars were the little girl's brother and cousin. Both of them determined that they would learn English so they might read the English Bible and books about the "Bible God." The father of this little girl and her brother was rich, and so the boy soon got money to buy a Bible, which he hid away and secretly studied, learning some verses out of it every day. One day his Hindu father discovered the Bible, and angrily said he should go no more to college and should learn no more English. "These teachings will be your ruin," he said, "but you are young and will forget, for I will destroy this book." And so he tore up the Bible and burned every scrap of it. Meantime the cousin, a few years older, had also bought a Bible and was studying it and had learned without a teacher what Jesus meant when he said, "I am the way, the truth and the life," and begged permission to be baptized. This his father refused and sent him to Burma, where some months later he died mysteriously. It was believed he died a martyr's death because he would not give up his faith in Christ. The brother escaped his fate. Stealing away from his home, he heard a missionary preach and became more convinced that he should be a Christian. Then he went further away and heard another missionary, and asked to be baptized, and he was aided in escaping to a far-off island, where there was a mission and where he would be safe from his father. He was very sorry to leave his mother, whom he loved, and after some years, when his cruel father had died, he went back among his own people to tell them of the Saviour. He formed a Bible class, and has shown many of them the way to Christ. As in the case of Moses, lessons learned in childhood held as anchors in the testing hours of later life.

OUR SUNDAY SCHOOL SUPERINTENDENTS' ROUND TABLE

—HERE IS SOMETHING fresh and stimulating for organized boy classes that have weekday meetings and athletics and social service in their comprehensive plans. It is about a lot of "prize boys" who were not content to excel in one thing, but aimed at all-around excellence. And it will serve as additional illustration of how boys can be saved by giving them interesting good things to do in place of the bad activities to which their energies naturally turn when they are not otherwise employed. At the Panama-Pacific Exposition in San Francisco in 1915 there is to be a model boys' city. As a "runner up" for its foundation fifty boys chosen from the various cities of the United States by the National Youth Achievement Committee by reason of superior quality and achievements set sail from Boston, May 7, on a nine months' tour of the world. The ages of the boys range from 11 to 18. The candidates were graded on general achievements, scholarship, character, athletic ability, musical ability and health. Each boy was asked the questions: Can you run the 100-yard dash? Do you smoke? Did you ever take part in any dramatic performance? Can you swim? Do you work in the summer? Have you a bank account? The accomplishments of one boy, as sent to the committee, include: "Ability to play the piano and sing. Worked in summer time and on Saturdays at a clothing store and for an electric light company. Put a device on the furnace for closing and opening it from upstairs. Played on basket ball and gymnasium teams. Assists physical director at high school. Secretary of Sunday school and prominent in Christian Endeavor Union. Can milk a cow. Installed a private telephone system from his home to a friend's house. Can do general housework." Besides a number of exhibitions and contests in athletic games, the boys while in foreign cities will give a formal program. "There are 18,000,000 boys in the United States," says Judge Willis Brown, chairman of the committee. "All that the most of them require is some wholesome incentive to do something worth while. Every boy who can go to his teacher and produce proof that he has done something worth while will be entitled to one of the boys' achievement badges."

—THIS NUMBER OF THE CHRISTIAN HERALD will have reached its readers before the World's Sunday School Convention will open in Geneva, July 8-15. A special order of service has been prepared for Sunday, July 13, which is obtainable by all Sunday schools in the United States. We give a portion of the prayer which is part of that service, asking that it be offered in all CHRISTIAN HERALD Sunday schools:

Prayer—"O God, our help in ages past, our hope for years to come, we ask thy blessing upon us and upon thy children in all lands as we bow before thee. Thou art our Father, our Redeemer, our Guide, and without thee we can do nothing. We love thee, dear Lord, and we long to serve thee by bringing into one great fold all people throughout the world. They are thine, for thou hast created them. They are thine, for thou didst die to redeem them. They are thine, for thou art pleading for them. Bless them, every one, and make them thine own now and forever.

"Dear Jesus, bless the Sunday schools everywhere. May teachers and scholars be consecrated to thee and learn more and more to love thy Word. Hasten the day when every child in every land shall worship thee. Bring the nations into thy fold and add the heathen to thine inheritance, that at thy glorious coming the whole world may be ready to welcome thee and crown thee Lord of all. And to thee will we give now and forevermore all praise and glory, even as thou hast taught us: 'Our Father, who art in heaven,'" etc.

CENTENARY OF HENRY W. BEECHER

COMMEMORATION of the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of Henry Ward Beecher, which Brooklyn and Plymouth Church will observe this year, has the scope of a national celebration.

The opinions which men held thirty or fifty years ago concerning Beecher the preacher and agitator have crystallized into firm judgment of Beecher the man, and to-day he is acknowledged as a world figure. Phillips Brooks called him "the Shakespeare of the modern pulpit." Charles Spurgeon said, "I regard him as the greatest preacher Protestantism has produced." Dr. Allen, speaking for the Congregational churches of England, declared of this American, "He carried more genius as a preacher than any other man of our century."

Beecher was utterly courageous, utterly independent and utterly sincere. His was a great and commanding intellect, but the more one becomes acquainted with his life the more one learns that it was his heart that dominated all. His success owed its greatest debt not to his learning, not to his eloquence, not to his magnetic personality, but to the heart which spoke in honesty and commanded all these gifts of genius in the service of conscience.

THE LATE HENRY WARD BEECHER

Plymouth Church is Beecher's greatest monument, and it was these very traits of courage, independence and sincerity which led him to Plymouth Church. He was serving in an Indianapolis pulpit when, in 1847, Park Street Church, Boston, called him to its historic pulpit.

Now, normally, Boston should seem a splendid opportunity. Beecher was New England bred and New England educated, and a New Englander could appreciate the importance of Park Street Church. In the face of the great Unitarian defection of a few years previous, Park Street Church had remained the stronghold of orthodoxy. "Brimstone Corner" it was called, and it was a very important corner. It offered Beecher a commanding pulpit in an old and established community, with the surroundings of wealth, culture, and learning, which must have been dear to the mind of a New Englander. It was practically an offer of the leadership of New England Congregationalism. The reasonable course to take, for a young and ambitious minister, who had made a name for himself in the West and was aware of his own powers, would seem to be this course to Boston. To follow the headwould certainly have brought Beecher to Boston.

But about this time there came another call. Members of the Church of the Pilgrims in Brooklyn had decided to found a new church in their city. One of their number, who while visiting in the West had heard a remarkably stirring and unusual preacher in Indianapolis, suggested to the founders of the new church that here was a suitable man for their leadership. Beecher was thereupon invited to visit them; he came and preached, and immediately was called as the first pastor of Plymouth Church.

The church was just beginning; it had but sixteen members; its success was problematical. Perhaps it was just this that Beecher wanted—a chance to begin a work at its beginning. He came to Brooklyn in 1847, and then began one of the most remarkable ministries in the history of American Christianity.

It began in a tabernacle on Clinton Street and two years later the present meeting house on Orange Street was erected. Mr. Beecher made that the most conspicuous pulpit in America. He carried the church through three revivals, and built up the congregation from sixteen to twenty-five hundred members. The pulpit was his throne, and for thirty years he lectured three days every week, conducted his Friday prayer-meeting, and preached twice on Sunday. Dr. Hillis says Mr. Beecher's sermons and religious addresses in fifty years total 7,000, and his lectures on week days during that period aggregate 5,000 more.

PLYMOUTH CHURCH AS IT IS TO-DAY

All of the time that Beecher was doing this prodigious work in the pulpit he was active in many other directions. The period of his ministry in Plymouth Church spans the most tremendous years of our national life—the most tumultuous and the most critical years. The times gave Beecher opportunities to use his great gifts, but it was his courage and independence and honesty which made these services pre-eminent. Fame came with increased labors. Beecher became not only a national, but an international figure, distinguished in many fields.

As an editor and journalist he had built up the Independent and had founded the Christian Union (now the Outlook). As a political and social reformer he had been a leader in the anti-slavery agitation, had rocked the cradle of the Republican Party, by his lectures and addresses had contributed directly to the election of Abraham Lincoln, and by a series of addresses in England and Scotland in 1863 had carried the British working people over from the side of sympathy with slavery to that of pronounced advocacy of free labor and the Union. As religious teacher he had won a following all over the nation. The enormous congregations which crowded Plymouth Church twice each Sunday by no means measured the number of those who looked to Beecher as the inspired teacher of God's truth. Newspapers and other journals printed his sermons and addresses, and his congregation became nation-wide. He started another religious movement in one of our great educational centers when he established at Yale, in memory of his father, the Lyman Beecher Lectureship on Preaching. He delivered the first series of lectures himself, covering the ground so fully that Leonard Bacon said, "They might as well have closed up the institution, for Henry Ward Beecher has said everything on preaching that can be said."

When, in 1886, increasing labors and old age compelled Mr. Beecher to lessen his pulpit labors, he betook himself more and more to his library and study, engaged himself in The Life of Christ, and died while in this characteristic work, March 9, 1887. It is this long and fascinating and productive life whose centenary falls in this year. Litchfield, Conn., where he was born June 24, 1813; Amherst College, where he graduated in 1834; those Western towns, where his early ministry was spent, and where the school of poverty and necessity added to his education important disciplines which the college and theological seminary had not given, and Brooklyn, where all those eventful sowings of New England and the West were brought to marvelous fruitage—these are the milestones in Beecher's life.

His birthday falls in June, but the memorial committee, headed by Dr. Newell Dwight Hillis, has planned to have the commemorative exercises in October. They will occupy the last of that month with nightly meetings in Plymouth Church and a mass meeting in the Brooklyn Academy of Music. Many distinguished persons, some of those who worked with Mr. Beecher in his many activities, representatives of church and state and of the Civil War veterans will participate.

Dr. Hillis and the committee have been planning a Beecher Memorial for years, and at this centennial commemoration a permanent memorial to the great preacher will be dedicated. It includes a memorial house adjoining Plymouth Church and Beecher Park, in which a statue of the preacher will be set up.

The memorial committee has also planned to remove the remains of Mr. Beecher from Greenwood Cemetery and place them in a tomb in Beecher Park at Plymouth Church. Thus the memorial will be completed, with the preacher's ashes resting in the place that witnessed his wonderful life-work.

Albert J. Lyman, an old Brooklyn friend of Mr. Beecher, tells an interesting story of the Plymouth preacher's later years. "One never-to-be-forgotten afternoon," relates Mr. Lyman, "I remember walking with him back to his home from some occasion of funeral solemnity. He said suddenly: 'Well, Lyman, I suppose they'll try to take me out to Greenwood some day. But,' and just then the light javelin of his unmatched humor shot from his eyes, 'God knows I won't stay there.' Falling into his tone, I asked, rather impertinently, 'Where then shall we look for you, Mr. Beecher?' Instantly a change swept over his mobile face. The merry eyes widened, softened and looked far away, and the deep note thrilled up through his voice as he answered, gravely: 'Oh, somewhere in the thick of things, fighting for my country.'"

—A CABLE DISPATCH from Lyons, France, states that a noted bacteriologist of that city analyzed a "mud pie" with which his little son was playing, and found it to contain 10,215,000 dangerous microbes, including those of diphtheria, measles, smallpox, tetanus, pneumonia and tuberculosis.

—THE WONDERS OF THE stellar firmament grow as astronomy advances. Every year adds to our knowledge of the stars and multiplies those vast and innumerable phalanxes of brilliancy that gleam around us. From those of the first magnitude to the fourteenth, the numerical estimate of the astronomers now reaches amazing figures. Of the first magnitude there are visible thirty-eight stars, and the numbers increase in rapid ratio until in the fourteenth magnitude it is estimated that there are 8,325,000 stars. The eleventh, twelfth and thirteenth magnitudes have an aggregate of 8,000,000.

—AT A DINNER given in New York on June 10, by the Philippine Society, Manuel Quezon, a delegate from the Islands to Congress, made a strong appeal for independence. Ex-President Taft delivered a notable address, in which he declared that the Islands were not yet capable of self-government, and that were we to grant it now we would regret it later. Bishop Brent of the Philippines also spoke, earnestly supporting Mr. Taft's view.

—WE ARE RECEIVING many letters expressing the delight of our readers with Mrs. Porter's delightful serial story, Pollyanna. Lillie Rice Stuhl, of Butler, Ohio, writes: "We demand a sequel! The author has given a lesson to pessimists. She teaches a great moral as to the beauty and excellence of optimism. I wish some one would kiss her on both cheeks for me, and tell her how the readers here enjoyed Pollyanna. I hope Pollyanna will eventually marry Jimmy Bean after they are grown. It would be romantic." This is a fair sample of many letters on the subject. Mrs. Porter is now considering a second serial giving the little heroine's further adventures. Meanwhile Pollyanna in book form is in growing demand.

—COLONEL GOETTHALS, chief of the Panama engineering staff, has announced that the canal will be fully opened on January 1, 1915. It could be opened even earlier, but the schedule date, as set, will be adhered to. A vessel will probably be sent through, experimentally, on October 15 next, but at that date only one flight of locks will be fully completed. The vessel will be a comparatively small steamer, and her trip is designed to demonstrate the practical workings of the traffic system on the canal.

DAILY MEDITATION

FOR EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR

BY REV. J. H. JOWETT, D.D.

SUNDAY, JUNE 29. Genesis 45: 1-13. In forgiving his brethren Joseph sought the best explanation of their deed. He looked for anything bright about it, and where he could not find it he allowed his imagination to devise some possible and noble reason for what they had done. That is so unlike the ordinary conduct of men. When we have been injured we turn to the darker aspects of the betrayal. We search out the ugliest roots of deeds, and we feed our minds upon them in constant brooding. Any brighter suggestion is at once dismissed as being both unlikely and unwelcome. And then the black contemplation breeds resentment, malice, and all the foul progeny of revenge.

In forgiving his brethren Joseph sought to change their bitter remorse into healthy aspiration. Remorse may blight and wither the soul and transform it into an arid desert. It is the ministry of forgiveness to convert remorse into penitence, and so bring heavenly seed and rains into the desert waste, and so change "a sorrow which is unto death" into a sorrow that makes for the fruits of eternal life.

And in forgiving his brethren Joseph showered upon them actual beneficence. It was not a passive forgiveness which merely shrinks from revenge. It was positive, active, energetic, loading them with benefits. He overwhelmed them with a multitude of kindnesses, and buried the past in the glory of the present.

MONDAY, JUNE 30. Exodus 1: 8-14. Here is an early story of tyranny. But it is possible for us to feel relief in sympathy for the oppressed while in reality we are ranked with the oppressor. Tyrants are not confined to thrones. Every form of power may be oppressive, and may manifest itself in irresponsibility and pride. An "overlooker" may be a tyrant among the operatives in the factory. A mistress may be a tyrant over her maids. A teacher may be a tyrant in the realm of the school. We may all be Pharaohs in our petty kingdoms, and some one may be burdened by our cruel oppression.

All unsanctified power is the minister of tyranny. It is directed by pride, and glories in the subjection of others. It is not inspired by wisdom, nor is its exercise subdued by holy fear. It exults in its own commandments, and never tastes the deeper delights of service. Unhallowed strength tends to brutality, and it rejoices to plant its heavy feet on the necks of its victims.

So that instead of sitting in judgment on Pharaoh let me sit in judgment upon myself. How do I use my own power? Do I love to "lord it" over others? Do I find enjoyment in making others cringe? What is my tone and manner of address? Do I like to make them fear me, or do I seek to win their confidence and love? What is it that directs my power? Is it the sheer delight in power, or the love of service? "Even the Son of Man came not to be ministered unto but to minister." And this is the glorification of all power when by love we serve one another.

TUESDAY, July 1. Exodus 1: 22 to 2: 10. Moses was cradled in Providence. His earliest years were befriended and beset by the care of God. The divine purposes have long range, and they begin their blessed work apparently afar off. The emancipation of a people began in the protection of a cradle made of rushes, floating on the waters of the Nile. God watched over a babe and thus prepared a champion of the oppressed. Who would have thought, in looking upon the weakness of this little child, that he saw the key that would unlock the iron gate which imprisoned a people in bondage? God's arm is not shortened; it has a very far reach; and it begins the building of Zion at a cradle on the Nile.

The Lord prepares his servants for his work. Thus he began the early training of Lincoln for the liberation of the American slaves. He began the illumination of India by lighting a lamp at a cobbler's bench in Northampton. Nay, he began the Christian Church with a few fishermen on the Galilean shore. He began the provision of nesting-places for the birds of the air in a tiny mustard-seed. "A little one shall become a thousand."

God is even now "making ready" his deliverer for the next emancipation. When the hour is come, the man will appear. Perhaps he is now at school, or maybe he is sucking at his mother's breast. The Lord is preparing his own way, and when the hour strikes his knight will step forth fully armed for the work.

WEDNESDAY, July 2. Isaiah 49: 18-23. "And kings shall be thy nursing fathers, and their queens thy nursing mothers." And all this for a poor captive who had languished in impotence in cruel servitude! And now kings and queens are to nurse its frail life into strength and dominion. She that was trampled upon is to be nursed into mastery; she that was a mere footstool is to take the throne. Pharaoh's daughter is to nurse the little child who is to break her father's power. The emancipator is to be reared and schooled in the royal house whose throne he is to shake to its foundations. This is the way of our God. He makes his servants to "drink the blood of kings."

But what has all this to do with me? It has this: When I am in the line of the Lord's purpose and dead-set to the doing of his will, mighty allies will be called to feed my weaknesses, and to make me competent for my work and duty. Nature shall be my helper. Mighty circumstances shall be compelled to give me their blood. Things that would dominate me, such as disappointment, disaster, and death, shall be made to yield me tribute, and pour moral energy into my heart and will. "All things shall work together" for my good.

God appoints the nurses for his "little ones." He brings them out of weakness into strength, and when the crisis calls for a leader, the child of the cradle is like a martial host.

THURSDAY, July 3. Psalm 27: 1-10. "Now shall mine head be lifted up above mine enemies round about me." This is often God's way of saving me; his salvation is by elevation. He makes me victorious over my enemies by lifting me above them. He does not destroy the enemies; he puts me out of their reach. He gives me the security of a loftier life.

My enemies have an easy time with me when my life is lived on a low plane. They are rendered impotent when I live "in heavenly places in Christ Jesus." Microbes become fewer and fewer as we climb the higher mountains, until, in some sublime elevation, the air becomes so rare and pure that the last pursuing invader faints away and dies. And so it is with the microbes of the soul; they swarm and devastate when the life is low-minded, where everything is of the earth earthy, and where no heavenly air blows across the soul. Temptations come to such a life, and find everything congenial, and they destroy the graces of the soul as the cankerworm destroys the produce of the field. But "what can harm us if we be followers of that which is good," if our mind is "set on things above," and if even now we sit with the Lord on his throne? "No plague shall come nigh thy dwelling." The elevation of our dwelling-place is our supreme defense. When God lifts us up, our enemies follow us in vain.

FRIDAY, July 4. Acts 7: 14-21. "And seeing one of these suffer wrong, he defended him." And so Moses defended one man against oppression, and later he became the champion of a nation. Chivalry in small spheres prepares for grander crusades. Abraham Lincoln, in the days of his childhood, would go through the woods seeking for tiny birdlings that had fallen out of their nests, and tenderly put them back again. And this was his schooling for the noble work of emancipating the slaves which glorified his later life. We are never going to do the bigger thing if the smaller thing is despised or ignored. We shall not do much in the great work of foreign missions if we suffer no pang for the ignorant and unprivileged at our own door.

"Who is made to stumble and I burn not?" Such was the holy boast of the apostle Paul. Whenever there was oppression, near or far, his heart burned in righteous indignation. His sacred fire was kindled by another's pain. His passions were healthy, and they were always ready to the chivalrous call. And so must mine be, and so they will be if I am baptized "with the Holy Ghost and with fire." "Our God is a consuming fire," and I must share that flame if I would be a child of the Highest and a "partaker of the divine nature."

SATURDAY, July 5. Psalm 118: 14-21. "The Lord is my strength and my song." Yes, first of all "my strength," and then "my song"! For what song can there be where there is langour and fainting? There must first be strength if we would have fine harmonies. So the good Lord comes to the songless and with holy power he brings the gift of "saving health."

"And my song"! For when life is healthy it instinctively breaks into song. The happy contented soul goes about the ways of life humming its satisfaction to itself, and is now and again heard by the passerby. The Lord fills the life with instinctive music. "His satisfactions" are deep; "he satisfies the hungry soul with goodness," and the inner jars and discords are changed into a harmony which is perfectly confluent with the order of his will. When life is holy, it becomes musical with his praise.

So here I see the appointed order in Christian service. It is futile to try to make people joyful unless we do it by seeking first to make them strong. First the good, and then the truly happy! First the holy, and then the musical. First God, and then the breath of his Holy Spirit, and then "the new song." When men exult in the health of God's countenance they will assuredly sing "the song of the Lamb."

DO YOU KNOW YOUR BIBLE?

THE Honor Roll for last month's list of questions will appear next week, also some names which have been added to two other Honor Rolls.

Again we must explain that it is impossible to answer by letter all questions as to the decisions made. The Bible questions are prepared with care; the answers received are marked with great pains, and all complaints carefully investigated.

New Questions—List No. 6

1. What king declared that he had acted like a kind of bird, and had mourned like still another kind?

2. Where is the weakness of idols implied by the statement that they were carried about on beasts?

3. Find an Old Testament passage stating that God's guidance will be as definite as a voice sounding in our ears.

4. One character of the Old Testament walked with God; another was known as the friend of God; another talked with God as a man talks with his friend; another was "greatly beloved." Name these men, with Scripture references.

5. What chapter in the Old Testament contains an invitation to the thirsty and hungry; the promise of a leader; the promise of pardon; the promise of joy?

6. How many nations were driven out of Canaan by the Israelites? Give a New Testament reference which states the number and an Old Testament reference which names the nations.

7. Find passages likening the overthrow of evil-doers to the passing of cloud, dew, chaff and smoke.

8. Find an Old Testament reference to a divided heart, and a passage in which one prays for a united heart.

9. Find two New Testament statements that God loves those whom he afflicts.

10. Mention three passages in which Paul declares that it is sometimes wise to refrain, for the sake of influence, from doing what we ourselves may consider harmless.

What Would Your Answer Be?

FROM a reader of this journal in a Southern city comes this strange and unusual letter:

"A little circle of friends here were greatly interested at a recent gathering when THE CHRISTIAN HERALD article in your issue of June 11, on "The World's Hope" and the duty of preparation for the Lord's coming, was read. To most of us it was a beautiful thought that to believers he has committed the task of "making all things ready." The question was asked: "If Jesus were to appear now, for a brief sojourn, to encourage his people, would he find the world better or worse? We know he would find his church, which he left but a little nucleus of believers, a great world-wide organization; but how would he regard its divisions, its antagonisms, its jealousies, its war of creeds? Would he find the true faith and the Holy Spirit in the churches generally? And what of other conditions—the great mass of non-churchgoers, the servitude of the laboring classes, the corruption of politics, the growth of crime, the luxury and extravagance of wealth, the indifference of the multitudes, unawakened to spiritual things; the grossness of the theaters, the white slave traffic? Would he find that the Gospel of peace and love and brotherhood had taken due root as he hoped and prayed that it would? And would he find that the professing church had done its whole duty in carrying the light to the heathen?"

We venture to ask THE CHRISTIAN HERALD to open its columns to the discussion of this, surely the greatest of all religious topics, since it embraces practically all there is of Christian duty and obligation. If we are truly working and praying and looking forward to "one great event," we should at least be able to give our reason for such a hope. R. M. W.

Chattanooga, Tenn.

Our correspondent's letter suggests a wide field of religious speculation. We are not to judge others, far less to judge the whole Christian world. Yet we are face to face with social, political, economic and religious conditions to-day that are so evident to every thoughtful mind as to warrant such an inquiry as his letter suggests. We commend it to the consideration of our readers, and would be pleased to have such an expression of views as the problem demands. All letters, however, should be brief. Such a discussion may well serve to arouse interest in a phase of Christian teaching which is too little in evidence in our pulpits and in the religious press to-day.

Is Rome Losing in Numbers?

IN MANY quarters there has been an impression—fostered partly by the claims of the Catholic press and partly by the uninformed discussion of the subject in Protestant publications and the daily newspapers—that the Roman Church in America was gaining numerically by leaps and bounds. For a time "the trend to Rome" was a foremost topic. When the official Catholic Directory was issued several months ago, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD directed attention to the fact that it claimed only a net increase of 138,000 adherents during the past year, being a distinct decline in the ratio of previous years. This we regarded as significant, especially in view of the great additions that might naturally have been expected as the result of our steadily rising immigration from Southern Europe. As an offset to this disappointing aspect of the situation, the Catholic journals made the most of the occasional defections from other churches.

But investigation made within the last few weeks shows conclusively that "the trend to Rome" is the other way, and that Rome's losses to Protestantism far outweigh its gains from all other faiths. The Boston Transcript publishes a list of leading Presbyterian churches throughout the country, whose records "show an average of five per cent. of their entire membership to come from the Roman Catholic Church." Among these churches are the following:

Westminster, Minneapolis; Brick, Rochester; First, Seattle; First, Newark; Covenant, Cincinnati; Tabernacle, Philadelphia, and University Place and West End, New York. For example, the University Place, New York, has in its membership 139 former Roman Catholics; the First Presbyterian, Newark, 150; the First of Seattle, twenty-five.

Commenting on this the Transcript says: "If the same proportion obtains throughout the Presbyterian Church, former Roman Catholics now in its active membership number 70,000."

Zion's Herald, a Methodist publication, which has also taken up the work of investigation, says:

The records are not confined to the Presbyterian Church. The investigation was carried on also among a number of Protestant Episcopalian Churches, also selected at random, and precisely the same results were obtained. The churches chosen were the famous Church of the Advent, Boston; Holy Trinity, Brooklyn; St. Thomas', Brooklyn; St. Peter's, Chicago; and Gethsemane, Minneapolis. For example, St. Thomas', Brooklyn, has above 100. Rev. Dr. Shaw, of Chicago, says: "Every confirmation class brings some Roman Catholics in St. Peter's." If the same proportion obtains in all of that communion as in these whose records were examined, there are between 45,000 and 50,000 members of that church who were formerly Roman Catholics."

These represent only two of the great Protestant denominations, and their figures show an increase, straight from Rome, which practically wipes out the entire gain claimed for the Roman Church in its official directory. Other Protestant Churches—the Methodist, Baptist, Lutheran, Disciples, Congregationalist, Reformed—have all had proportionate additions from the same source, and these when fully compiled will show that the "trend from Rome" toward Protestantism in America has carried with it more than double the increase claimed by Rome from all sources. This is the true and logical explanation of the Catholic Church's meager gains—the fact that thousands of its adherents are forsaking the Papacy and coming voluntarily into the larger light and broader freedom of the Protestant faith.

Clearly, here is irrefutable evidence that there is something wrong with Rome—something which may well give it pause in its campaign to "make America Catholic." Gaining in wealth, power and influence, it is losing its ancient hold upon the masses, losing not by tens and hundreds, but by thousands! Its highest hopes are threatened by such a situation, for it is a loss that is irreparable and which seems destined to grow with the spread of education and the love of freedom. These have made shipwreck of Rome in the Old World; they now threaten to overwhelm it in the New.

The Right to Marry

THERE are indications that the movement toward the eugenic marriage, in which Dean Sumner of Chicago was the pioneer, is finding serious consideration among clergymen in many parts of the country. Over fifty ministerial associations, representing nearly four thousand pastors, are reported as having voluntarily adopted the custom of demanding health certificates in addition to licenses from all candidates for matrimony who appear before them. Much criticism and not a little sarcasm have been indulged at the expense of the new idea; but its advocates stoutly maintain that reason and justice are on their side in demanding that the welfare of the race and the integrity of the home be protected, and add the conviction that its influence will operate toward happier unions and fewer divorces. Some even urge that in order not to impose undue obstacles, licenses might be made easier of procurement, but health certificat should be imperative. On the other hand, it mu be admitted that the opponents of the new ide have at least the weight of sentiment on their sid when they contend that the Sumner plan takes muc of the romance out of marriage, puts restraint upo human liberty, and invades a hitherto sacred doma in assuming to restrict the right to marry—domain in which the State, till now, has never a tempted interference. Meanwhile, none are s enthusiastic over the new plan for "reformin matrimony" as the clergymen themselves, and a they are in a good position to judge of the effect o ill-assorted marriages, their growing support of th Sumner plan may be regarded as significant.

The Laborers and the Lord

IT IS a most distressing thing to note that labo leaders and labor organizations occasionally mak defiant boasts of their disbelief in God. At one o two recent labor demonstrations a banner was dis played bearing the dreadful words: "No God. N Master."

The legend on this ensign ought to awaken in th hearts of God's people a twofold grief: Grief tha these brothers of theirs have so misunderstood thei Lord; grief that the church has been so indifferen or antagonistic to the claims of labor that such a view of God is possible even in the minds of a few

When will the laborers learn not only that Go is in sympathy with them, but that they need hin in their struggle for justice? When will the churc learn that it can not rightly represent and serv its Lord until it has taken its place alongside the toiler and helped him to win his rights?

Simply on the basis of practical common sens it is a terrific mistake for individual labor leader to flaunt their atheism before the church and the world. It blinds good people to the real situation; it tempts them to think that the new uprising among labor classes is essentially an ungodly, irreligious thing. It alienates many who might otherwise work sympathetically with the toilers. It misrepresents most grievously the real labor movement, for there are in its ranks many devout believers and followers of the Christian's God.

Let the last phrase on the banner stand. In the ideal social structure there will be no master, except as one shall guide in brotherly helpfulness and skill the tasks of others. We shall learn at last to live as brothers should. But when that day dawns it will have dawned because the comforting God of the people has bowed down the hearts of men to himself and has made them hear and heed the message and accept the salvation and friendship of his Son—the Carpenter of Nazareth.

A Four-Version Bible

WE ARE living in an age of multiplied Bible translation and of dissemination on a scale that would have appeared incomprehensible to our forefathers. With the Word in almost every known language under the sun, being circulated—some of it complete and others the Gospels and different portions—by the hundreds of thousands of copies every month, and with large fortunes dedicated exclusively to the work of Bible translation and distribution, it is not difficult to foresee a day when the printed message of truth will be in the possession of men and women of every tongue. These are mostly translations from the Authorized Version, but now we are to have a Bible in no less than four versions. This is to be the product of the gift of Edward E. Guy of New York, who died recently, leaving his entire estate to be devoted to this work. He had spent forty years in Bible research and was an expert student of ancient Bible manuscripts. Each page of the new Bible will contain four columns, the first giving the Codex Sinaiticus and the parallel columns presenting the Modern Greek, the King James Version and the Guy translation. His ripe scholarship and the fact that he personally studied the oldest existent manuscripts in the world's great libraries, will invest his work with special interest. It is stated that Mr. Guy held the old Authorized Version, with its stately and dignified phraseology, in higher esteem than any of the later translations, and almost unimpeachable in point of accuracy. It will probably be many months before the critics have an opportunity of passing upon the value of Mr. Guy's labors, which seem to have covered the larger part of a studious lifetime.

mbassador Page Formally Received

WALTER HINES PAGE, one of America's most able and noted publishers and editors, who was recently appointed United States Ambassador to the Court St. Janies, was formally received on May 30 by ng George, to whom he presented his letters of dence. Sir Edward Grey, the British foreign retary, presented Mr. Page to his majesty, who turn introduced him to Queen Mary. Then Amssador Page presented to their majesties the mbers of the embassy staff, most of whom had ended many courts and levees in company with late Whitelaw Reid. Ambassador Page and his retaries, in ordinary evening dress, were driven, gether with the military and naval attachés, in iform, from the hotel where the ambassador is ying, to Buckingham Palace in a royal carriage, racting considerable attention as the string of rriages passed through Mayfair to the palace. r Arthur H. J. Walsh, the king's master ceremonies, accompanied the ambasdor from and to his hotel. Speaking of e audience afterwards Mr. Page said: t was one of the most pleasant experices of my life. The king and queen oke cordially and kindly about the subts of mutual interest to both nations." fter the royal audience, Ambassador ige called on Paul Cambon, the French nbassador, and dean of the diplomatic rps of Great Britain. He will soon make s formal calls on the other ambassadors. r. Page is one of a long line of the ablest en the nation could furnish, who have en appointed to represent our governent at the Court of St. James. This apintment is in accordance with the avowed licy of President Wilson to appoint as epresentatives to foreign courts men of tellectual and literary ability as well as integrity irrespective of the possession a private fortune. Mr. Page was editor the Forum, and afterwards of the tlantic Monthly. During the past twelve ears he has edited the World's Work. He as been a great student of the educational nd sociological questions that affect our ountry and the wide world, and for wenty-five years has been in the midst of he discussion and settlement of these quesions. Being an excellent platform speaker e is the kind of a man to command the espect of the nation to which he goes, and o bring honor upon his own country. The postle uses this governmental office as a ype of the ministry of Christians from the ourt of heaven to the children of men to ecure harmony and happiness.

Now then we are ambassadors for Christ, as though God did beseech you by us: we pray you in Christ's stead, be ye reconciled to God. (II Cor. 5: 20.)

Insane Artist Honored

RALPH ALBERT BLAKELOCK, who has been confined in an insane asylum for the last sixteen years, was made an associate member of the National Academy of Design at a recent meeting. There were thirty other candidates, but Mr. Blakelock alone received the unanimous support of the hundred members who voted. The determination to honor him was made when one of his paintings had been sold for $13,000 and others had been hung in the Metropolitan Museum, New York; the Brooklyn Institute, the Corcoran Gallery and the National Gallery in Washington. The artist was born in New York City in 1847 and became famous as a painter of Indian scenes. It was while he was painting his masterpiece, the "Pine Dance," that it was discovered that his reason was gone. He had his canvas before him like a piece of music and played violently on the piano, and used his brush alternately. He said he played the piano to get the rhythm into the movement of the dancers. Soon after the completion of the picture, which is in the Metropolitan Museum, he became insane and was sent to the Matteawan Asylum, where he remained six years and was then transferred to a similar institution in the northern part of New York. It is said at the academy that no attempt will be made to notify him of the honor conferred. The artist may have had a hereditary taint; he may have overtaxed his mind in his tireless pursuit of his profession; the world may have been slow in appreciating his merit. Through his knowledge of and participation in the things of this world, his pictures will live for generations. He is the same as dead, and of such it can be said:

His sons come to honor, and he knoweth it not; and they are brought low, but he perceiveth it not of them. (Job 14: 21.)

An Indian Landmark Gone

IN THE death of George Mitchell at Hempstead, Long Island, at the age of ninety the other day there passed away one of the last pure-blooded members of the great tribe of Shinnecock Indians. Few men lived to see more sweeping changes than he. He saw the silence of the red man's country disturbed by the rumbling of the wagon, the ranting of the railway train, and the noises of the automobile. He lived to see men fly in the air, where only the wild birds dared to venture, and go swifter and higher than they. Almost beside his hut he saw the second city of the world spring into being as by magic. His life was a landmark measuring the period of the world's greatest progress from barbarism to civilization. The fading away of this Indian tribe calls to mind this fact:

One generation passeth away, and another generation cometh; but the earth abideth forever. (Eccles. 1: 4.)

THE NEW AMERICAN AMBASSADOR LEAVING TO MEET KING GEORGE

Overemphasis of Social Service

DEAN SHAILER MATHEWS, president of the Federal Council of Churches in America, issues a warning against the substitution of social service for spirituality in the church. He says: "Picnics are not the equivalents of prayer-meetings and Sunday school baseball leagues have not yet developed into revivals. A Protestant church cannot be an ethical orphan asylum; it must be a home in which souls are born into the newness of life. True, the church wants its ministers to be alive to the needs of the hour in politics and in industrial reform. Yet most of all do Americans want to be assured of God and immortality, and the worth of righteousness. When they ask for 'the bread of life' they will not be satisfied with treatises on eugenics." Christ enjoined social service and plainly taught that his treatment of men in the last day would depend on their treatment of each other here. And yet he laid the emphasis on the new birth, on the supreme love for him out of which all love for one's fellows and all true social service flows. There is little doubt that there is a tendency in many places to substitute the outer service for the inner principle of the Gospel. The supreme passion for saving the souls of men is the one thing needful for the church of to-day, and all the social services, the sweet charities that have characterized the Gospel in the generations of the past will beautify and sanctify our own. Paul puts the emphasis on the saving Gospel as the supreme thing when he says:

For I determined not to know anything among you, save Jesus Christ, and him crucified. (I Cor. 2: 2.)

Nature's Unsolved Mysteries

A RECENT author has recorded some of the puzzles of nature and Professor Serviss has called attention to them. The brilliant diamond and the dull piece of charcoal are of the same substance exactly, pure carbon; one is crystallized. The diamond put in the fire swells up and becomes as ugly and opaque as a piece of coke, and no chemistry can ever get the ugly mass back into the diamond, glancing with its strange interior fires. The poison of the rattlesnake, which, injected into the body, kills, contains the same elements as the white of an egg the consumptive takes to save his life. Coal gas, with the most offensive smell, and oil of roses, with delicious odor, each consist of four atoms of hydrogen combined with four atoms of carbon. Oil of orange, lemon, cloves, ginger, and black pepper is in every instance composed of sixteen atoms of hydrogen and ten of carbon. Ammonia, with its cruel pungency of smell, is composed of hydrogen and nitrogen, neither of which has any odor. The apples, peaches, pears, plums and cherries of the orchards, the grapes on the vine, the berries in the garden, the corn and wheat in the field, are all made out of the same material of earth, air, sunlight, dewdrop and shower, and how different in form, color, and flavor! How does the hen get the egg out of the grain, or the cow milk from the green grass, or the bee honey out of the buckwheat, or the worm the robe for the queen out of the mulberry leaves? If they could speak, they would tell us they do not know, but that the Creator who made them and set them to their tasks does. There are many puzzles in nature that have been solved and will continue to be solved. Luther Burbank has been a marvelous interpreter of the secrets of the vegetable world. But there are riddles too deep for him or any one else to solve. Mr Burbank can turn a field of yellow poppies into a field of crimson ones, but he will never be able to make a poppy or to mix any earthly pigment so that he can paint a flower. We search for an explanation of the puzzle of puzzles, life itself, which is responsible for the mysteries we cannot understand. It is the specific life in the animal or plant that makes it what it is. It is the snake's poison that destroys the body with albumen, and the hen's gift that saves it with the same albumen. It is the wheat life that makes the grain small to grow on a slender stem, and to taste like flour; it is the corn life that makes the grain larger, on a stronger stalk, and to taste like meal. It is the individual life in the orchard tree that gives the form, color, and flavor of the fruit. Life is the unexplained puzzle that determines all. The hen, minus its head, lays no egg; the cow in the butcher shop gives no milk; the bee, dead on the ground, makes no honey; the dead orchard tree bears no fruit. This great fact is the puzzle of the spiritual world, the mystery of mysteries in the incarnation, and the mystery of the relation of God's life to the human soul, giving to it life, growth, flowers, fruit, dwelling in the soul so intimately, transforming it so completely, and determining its thoughts, sentiments, habits, character, ministry and destiny. This life of God in the human soul is the love of the living Christ which gives to character the blush of the peach, the sweetness of honey, the beauty and fragrance of the rose. That these significant, saving, spiritual facts of blessed experience are veiled in mystery is asserted by the apostle when he says:

Without controversy great is the mystery of godliness. (I Tim. 3: 16.)

THE KAISER'S 25TH ANNIVERSAR

EMPEROR WILLIAM II OF GERMANY

From his latest photograph

AND Frederick, Emperor of Germany, reigned one hundred days when he died, and there came to the throne William, aged twenty-nine years. That was twenty-five years ago, on the 15th of June. Then all Europe looked upon William II as an autocratic and impulsive young man, heart and soul a soldier and thirsting for military glory. Not long after his accession he overruled the counsels of the great Bismarck, the Iron Chancellor, making it perfectly plain that he and he alone would be master in Germany. He began the organization of Germany's mighty military power and the nations feared him as a menacing force and dubbed him "The War Lord of Europe."

Now, at the end of twenty-five years, when Germans are celebrating the peace and prosperity, the progress and enlightenment that the reign of their emperor has symbolized, men of all nations have arisen to praise William II as one of the greatest factors for peace and progress that our age has seen.

Lord Blyth, a noted English authority, says in reply to a request from the New York Times for his opinion on this subject:

"I believe the Kaiser really has been the true and central factor of the past peaceful policy of Germany. Kaiser Wilhelm does not want war, not only because peace will pay Germany better, but because he sincerely prefers peace for its own sake.

"The Kaiser's love and reverence for his grandmother, Queen Victoria, are well known, and he must have been much influenced by her unfailing wisdom. He has, too, no doubt, the natural desire to follow the lead of his illustrious uncle, King Edward the Peacemaker."

Herr Arthur von Gwinner, one of the most eminent of Germany's financiers, writes in part as follows:

"His reign will be memorable in history for achievements of peace and progress. At the head of the strongest army the world has seen, William II has kept peace during a quarter of a century, while all his big neighbors, without any exception, have been warring and conquering. The achievements of the present emperor's reign must be sought, therefore, in comparing the figures of the German Empire's population, wealth and trade; its industrial, agricultural and social progress; the nation's savings and peaceful increase.

"Population increased from 47,000,000 to 66,000,000. The emigration of Germans to foreign countries dropped from 66,000 to less than one-quarter of that figure; it practically has disappeared, the number of foreigners immigrating into the German Empire having come to exceed the number of emigrants. The number of persons employed in the industries, mining, and trade has doubled — it is now about 15,000,000. Foreign trade has trebled. The shipping increased from 95,000 ships sailed and returned to nearly three times that number, and the tonnage of ships from 18,000,000 to over 60,000,000. At the beginning of Emperor William's reign there were 39,000 kilometers of railways in Germany; there are 60,000 now. Letters forwarded by post have quintupled. Deposits in savings banks have increased about fivefold; they now exceed $4,500,000,000. Figured on every German man, woman and child, they exceed, per head, the savingsof any other nation in the world."

Ex-President Theodore Roosevelt writes: "The one man outside this country from whom I obtained help in bringing about the peace of Portsmouth was His Majesty William II. . . . This was a real help to the cause of international peace, a contribution that far outweighed any amount of mere talk about it in the abstract, for in this as in all other matters an ounce of performance is worth a ton of promise."

Ex-President Taft says in his letter: "The truth of history requires the verdict that, considering the critically important part which has been his among the nations, he h been, for the last quarter of a century, the greatest single individual force the practical maintenance of peace in the world."

THE GERMAN EMPEROR, AGED 29

As he appeared at his accession

Two famous Englishmen give these glowing tributes. The Duke of Argy writes: "The German Emperor's life has been worthy of his father and of h mother, and no higher praise can be rendered in grateful acknowledgment c a great career—great with the abounding blessings of peace through steac fast striving for strength, and duty done for his people and his justice to hi neighbors. . . . This generation of Germans have good reason to be proud c and to love their patriot emperor." Sir Gilbert Parker, the author statesmar says: "The highest praise that I can offer concerning Emperor Williar II is that he would have made as good a King of England as our history ha provided, and as good a President of the United States as any since Georg Washington. . . . When he became emperor Germany—and Prussia par ticularly—was rigid, narrow, and pedantic in all too many respects. Unde his enlightened, tolerant, and broad-minded guidance she has become—ever Prussia has become—resilient, absorptive, and almost impulsively adaptable The world owes Emperor William a debt of gratitude. . . . He has proved himself among the most civilized, internationally patriotic of rulers."

OUR AWFUL ANNUAL FLOOD LOSSES

FACTS PERTINENT TO EXISTING CONDITIONS IN THE MISSISSIPPI DRAINAGE AREA—THE MORAL, ECONOMIC, PATRIOTIC DUTY OF CHRISTIAN HERALD READERS

BY E. R. JOHNSTONE

THE Spanish have a proverb: "He who will not look forward shall look backward with a tear in his eye."

Substitute the nation for the individual and the application of the proverb is apparent to many of our political, social and economic ills, which more careful provision, more business method, would have prevented or abated.

There is an obverse side. We do not look backward long enough, intelligently enough, hopefully enough. You remember the little boy who bewailed his inability to make his "remembery work as well as his forgettery." No nation in this world is quicker to recognize calamity by substantial, generous aid. No civilized country practically forgets disaster as readily as ours. The reason? Not lack of intelligence, or pride, surely. Doubtless there are many reasons, among them belief in the inexhaustible riches of the country; individual opportunity to make money and the quick rewards of industry and mental alertness; distance from the immediate locale of catastrophe, and absence of direct personal loss.

There are thousands of trained observers and thinkers in the United States who believe that the greatest economic problem that confronts us is the prevention, or large reduction, of waste from the floods that yearly devastate some considerable portions of the one and a quarter million of square miles embraced between the Rocky and the Appalachian mountain ranges and drained by the 15,000 miles of navigable waterways that make up the Mississippi and its trihutaries. These men believe that this problem of prevention is more important to the material welfare of our nation than questions of tariff and revenue, than regulation of trusts or reform in the currency, than exclusion of Orientals or reconstruction of our merchant marine, and publicists so believing do not minimize the gravity of any one of the problems mentioned.

SOME ASTOUNDING FIGURES

Here are some figures furnished me by John M. Parker of New Orleans, who, according to Colonel Theodore Roosevelt, himself a potent factor in conservation, is of the very highest authority in matters relating to flood losses. The total Panama excavation for the trans-isthmian canal will be 210,000,000 cubic yards. The annual erosion of the banks of the Mississippi River alone (tributaries excluded) is estimated at more than 1,000,000,000 cubic yards.

The Mississippi in flood is eight times the volume of mighty Niagara.

The annual losses in the Ohio valley alone exceed $50,000,000 and the Ohio is only 967 miles long and drains but 210,000 square miles.

Gifford Pinchot estimates the flood losses since 1900 at $1,000,000,000, and statisticians agree that direct flood losses within the last half century exceed the total cost of all the wars (including the Civil War) in which this country has ever been engaged.

Floods in the Mississippi Valley carry out to the Gulf of Mexico every year nearly 600,000,000 tons of the richest soil in the whole great basin, and the irony of the loss is biting when it is remembered that this vast area of alluvial is wrenched from the producer only to obstruct navigation by depositing bars or shallowing channels, and that this same producer must be taxed to pay for a second removal of this lost producing area. All of these figures have been on the direct lines of dollars or square miles. Who can estimate the volume of the value of the lost hope and courage of those who see the results of years of hard endeavor swept out in a single night, and swept away by the floods that originate far away from where the greatest damage is done?

DESTRUCTION IN LOATHSOME FORM

Probably a majority of CHRISTIAN HERALD readers have never seen an extensive flood or the flood-ravaged country after the waters have subsided. It has been the writer's fortune—or misfortune—to have seen many floods, as far north as Poplar River, on the mad Missouri, as far south as the delta entrance of the Mississippi; floods in Cuba, in China, Mexico; cloud-bursts in Arizona and "June rises" on the north Saskatchewan.

Every one of them is ghastly in its effects, but I never saw more depressing devastation than that following the floods of last March on the Ohio and its tributaries. I was impressed by what a San Franciscan said as he looked over the Muskingum Valley three weeks after the highest water had subsided: "I lost everything I had by fire in San Francisco in April, 1906," said the man, "and the destruction there was bad enough, sad enough, I can tell you. But it was clean compared to this. Why, I don't believe I could have made good again, as I did, if I had found what was left of my property in such shape as that you do. Ugh! Look at that mass, that mess of slimy, unhealthy looking mud, and that contorted pile of débris with dear knows what of former value tangled up, twisted about, smeared with dried slime. If I must be cleaned out again, let it be cleaned out, not buried under and drowned in filth."

There is no question among men who have seen

COMMENCEMENT DAYS

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER, JR.

THE sky is blue overhead and the trees are a tender green; birds sing in hushed, thrilling notes and tiny breezes murmur words to the flowers. For it is June, the month of roses, and and happiness.

Margaret E. Sangster, Jr.

ne little red school-e by the road is silent and in the big stone institutes, and in the ges, the books have laid away, and the humming voices are White-robed girls men in dress suits d, self-conscious but d, waiting for the di-has, or wander to-er, perhaps for the time, over the well-d campus. For the duation means parting ell as commencement for the girls. hen a girl graduates it is the ing of a new life to her. Her es are high and her ambitions are e of the stuff o' dreams. The re is a rose-hued something cov-with a veil of illusions through h the "shadows of the world ap-."

ommencement day stands for a t deal to the graduate. It means victory in a battle with the forces cience and mathematics and Latin, the languages, and English; it ns the realization of a very real m that has taken years to ma-alize; it is the gate to a broader better country. It means all of and, oh! so infinitely much more, each graduate carries a heart too for mere words, a heart in which longings of childhood are as one the hopes of grown-up-land.

have attended commencements at eges that were really pathetic. m-mates have clasped hands si-ly, with dim eyes, as they sang ld Lang Syne," and one has felt t they are mentally saying good-a farewell too deep to put into e words. For college and school ngs many people together that me from the ends of the earth."

he ones who take the most pure, lloyed joy in commencements are mothers, for they see a glimpse of ir own girlish souls shining out of eyes of their daughters, and they l more of love and pride in the con-tional speech based on "What is rare as a day in June?" than an ob-re artist feels in his first recog-ed work.

Sweet girl graduates have made ad-sses ever since school days have un — and finished. They have ked to their classmates of many ngs in which the trite phrases often ur that mean so much to the young irts. It may sound forced to the sé, indifferent commencement-goer, to one who loves the speaker a rring sentence such as:

'Beyond the Alps lies Italy!" "We ve crossed the Rubicon of our lives," even, "We are standing where the ook and the river meet," sounds very al indeed.

I once heard some girls talking out their approaching graduation. e girl was going to Paris to study t. Her slender brown fingers ved nervously while she talked, as she wished already that she was her canvas with a box of colors and long chubby brush. Another girl s going in for suffrage with all of e power and influence that money d an old family name could buy. t another spoke of fame gained rough a beloved old violin that could b in heart-breaking cadence or sing ht-heartedly for its mistress. Only e girl was silent about her secret ngings.

"Now, Mary," said the first girl to r, half reproachfully, "why so si-nt? What are you going to do?"

"Well," said the girl slowly, "I was going to go to school and learn to model figures in clay—and plaster—and marble. I thought at one time that people might hear of me. But mother has broken down and there are the four children that have to be taken care of, and educated, and loved. I guess, girls, that I shall just stay at home."

Perhaps that graduating class will be famous in time. Perhaps the violin will sing to great, silent, wondering audiences, and perhaps the paintings will go down as a heritage of wonder through the ages. Perhaps the name of a girl will be powerful in politics and reforms; but oh! of this I am sure: God will write one name in his heavenly book of deeds.

Girls, I am going to pretend that I am a fortune-teller. I am going to sit in a dark corner with a bright scarlet shawl thrown over my face, and my head on my hands. I shall have a large sleepy-looking owl on my right hand, and a small wide-awake black kitten on my left. Do you see the picture? Then I shall take a clear crystal ball and read in it the fortunes of the girls who are graduated. This is what my make-believe crystal tells me:

All of my graduating girls are going to leave school and go in to whatever work is ready for them, be it at home or abroad, with happy hearts and brave spirits, for they are going to make a glad game out of their lives. And above all, my girls are going to remember that, as the wives and mothers of a new generation, the fate of our country lies in their hands; for the women-folk are the molders of the country.

Before the knights of the round table were deemed worthy of a title they were made to live up to this motto. It is a wonderful motto, and I wish that my girls would remember it, and love it even as though they were armor-clad men who made the days of chivalry a theme for poem and ballad.

> Live pure, right wrong, follow the king;
> Else wherefore born?

With that motto blazoned in one's heart, the world seems to be a better place.

The little Roman boys who went to school in the days before Nero and his successors sent the city to its ruin, did not use the pencil and paper that we know. Instead they wrote on little wax tablets with a sharpened stick, and when the lesson was finished they smoothed the wax down and began anew on the flat clean surface. Girls, life is one long series of lessons, some charming, easy ones; others as hard as granite, and as heartbreaking as despair. But if you keep the tablet of your mind clean and spotless it is always very easy to begin again.

And as you receive the diploma that means the finishing of one lesson in the school of experience, remember that life is at the commencement and that there is plenty of time for you to follow the King.

When the end of your lesson has come, dear,
And the school books are laid on the shelf,
And the playtime and worktime is finished,
And your heart is in tune with itself,
Then, dear, take a grip on your life-line,
And conquer each task worth your while,
So that when the last lesson is done, dear,
You may go to your God with a smile.

Any physician will tell you that. Scientists are agreed that soups properly prepared are among the most valuable aids to digestion and nutrition. And this is peculiarly true of

Campbell's TOMATO SOUP

Our method of preparing it preserves the most useful properties of choice tomatoes in their best condition. And we blend these elements with other nourishing ingredients by a formula which gives this favorite soup a flavor and wholesomeness distinctively its own. The simple addition of milk or cream instead of water, renders this at once the most tempting and most nutritious soup ever produced.

IS EVANGELISM DYING OUT?

An Illinois Evangelist's View of the Situation

I HAVE been engaged exclusively in the evangelistic field for a number of years, my work has called me from one end of the country to the other, having worked in twenty-seven States, besides Canada and Great Britain. To your question, "Is Evangelism Dying Out?" I answer most emphatically, NO! I have had more calls this season than for the past three years, have seen more souls saved, have found the pastors hungry for the salvation of souls, and the hearts of the officers and members of the churches burdened for the unsaved. Methods have necessarily changed, because conditions are constantly changing; but the heart hunger of the human race still exists. Evangelism is not dying out, and as long as the world stands it must continue, for this is the divine plan as laid down in the Book.

JOSEPH C. LUDGATE.
Wheaton, Ill.

The Day of "No Method" Evangelism Has Gone

WE HEARTILY endorse the stand taken by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD regarding evangelism. We confidently believe that evangelism is not dying out. The day of "no method" evangelism is past and we thank God for that. The definite preaching of the Word of God, the intelligent use of Gospel songs and sane methods are welcomed. The consecrated evangelist who is called of God, trained for his work, and filled with the Spirit, will always have an abundant field of operation.

We favor such an Evangelistic Federation.

A. R. LYTLE.
Vernon, Ill. G. A. DEFLON.

A Federation the Remedy for Existing Evils

I AM more and more convinced, as I study prophecy and present conditions, that Jesus is soon coming to reckon with earth's nations, and that the day of grace is far spent. And I am growing impatient with much of the so-called evangelism of our day. In the catalogue of Eph. 4-11, we find that the evangelist's relationship to the church is even more vital than that of the pastor. But to-day we have so-called evangelists who sustain no relationship whatever to the church, and whose love for money is paramount to their love for the church and a lost world. These self-appointed, irresponsible, untrained evangelists invariably poison the church with their heresies, cause dissatisfaction among the laity with the pastors, and reflect discredit upon the labors of men actually called of God to do the work of the evangelist. I am therefore fully in sympathy with the pastor who dreads the evangelist, and I am thoroughly convinced that evangelism is fast dying out. I most heartily endorse Dr. W. E. Biederwolf's propositi concerning a National Evangelistic Federation as a correction for these ills. What is needed now is concerted action under some efficient leader, like Dr. Biederwolf or Dr. Chapman.

It must not be our sole aim to win sinners but to prepare the church to care for those who are won. Right here we too often fail, and within six months after the campaign, few results can be found. Card-signing should be abandoned forever and either altar services or inquiry meetings substituted where seekers can pray through and really touch God. To influence them to simply espouse the cause is to do them and ourselves, our God, and the church in general, a gigantic injustice! We should be too modest to speak or think of modern methods of getting men saved; there has never been but one method. If we are to bring evangelism back to its proper place, before leaving the field we must set aside a special service for the churching of converts. We have failed right here to stand by the pastors, and later on they have discovered that they spent their money on the evangelist for nought. We should see to it that classes of converts are organized in churches joined and spiritual leaders appointed, qualified to instruct them in the Word and doctrine, and capable of leading them in the deep things of God. We should carry our converts on our hearts as much as the pastor should, and if we do, we will be thorough in our dealings with them. Pastors have grown very weary of being harassed by begging evangelists, who cannot trust God to take care of them, and who are forever urging their own financial welfare. Let the evangelist trust God, keep quiet about his earnings, preach the Gospel earnestly, uncompromisingly, lovingly, prayerfully. Let him get away from all desire for worldly honor or store, and with his heart on fire with holy zeal for the church of Christ, and burdened for a lost world, and filled with the joy of sacrifice, he will have the endorsement of pastors, the call of the church, and abundant success in his labors of love.

E. T. LIDDELL.
Philadelphia, Pa.

The Influence of Evangelism on Church Growth

I WISH to say a word about the criticism of evangelists and of evangelism that has been so widespread during the past few years. In the first place, I wish to say that much of the criticism which has pleaded for "sane" evangelists and "sane" evangelism has itself been insane.

What are the results of the criticism that has been going on for a number of years? First, hundreds of conscientious, godly evangelists have been ignored and their influence destroyed for all time. To-day there is less desire for the aid of evangelists on the part of pastors and people than there has been for many years—and along with the desire for the aid of evangelists has gone the desire for revival meetings, and the lack of the vitalizing work of the evangelists has left multitudes of our churches either dead or in a dying condition. Three thousand seven hundred and thirty-seven Presbyterian churches, North, received not one solitary addition on confession of faith last year; 1,997 Presbyterian churches, maintaining Sabbath schools, won last year not even a single child to confess Jesus Christ. All the churches in our country gained last year 280,000 less members than the year before. The Southern Presbyterian Church reported 1,617 churches (about one-half of the whole number) in which there was not a single convert during the past year. The evangelical churches of the United States made a net gain of a little less than 1½ per cent. last year, and had it not been for the evangelists even this small gain would doubtless have been cut down almost to nothing.

Now, I have no ill feeling against these critics of the evangelists and evangelism. As a matter of fact, if I could have my way, the good Lord would take every one of them to heaven immediately, where they could no longer injure the cause of Christ in the earth. Then the godly self-sacrificing work of the evangelists would in time restore them to the place in the confidence of the pastors and churches which they ought to occupy.

If all the pastors of our land were criticized for their sins in the same proportion as are the evangelists, their influence and power would be destroyed in a day.

In conclusion let me say that I value your paper very highly and have distributed hundreds of copies in railway construction camps, prisons, etc.

soldier on the battlefield who de- s to be brave will train himself discipline himself until at last e istinguishes himself for valor. It s fine thing to practice being brave if one doesn't feel brave. Often men who actually do the bravest gs think of themselves as ex- ely timid; often those who think are brave find themselves failing he time of danger—like the soldier explained, when he was twitted having been a coward in battle: 'I heart was as brave as any man's, t my cowardly legs ran away with m."

eart and legs, tongue and hands, need training and equipping if we to be truly brave. The surest way be thoroughly brave is to have a at passion in the soul. You have rd the story of the mother snatch- her baby away from the crouching er. She was not thinking of being ve; she did not know she was brave. only knew she loved her baby; h such love in her heart she had to cue it.

n our second study of the year on e Ideal Christian" we considered zeal. Zeal and courage are closely ted. Zeal is something in the rt that compels one to act strenu- ly. So a burning love for the Sav- r, an intense desire to please and or him, an overwhelming longing win people to him, a real hatred of and a mighty eagerness to over- ow it—these things will make us ve. And if we do not possess them, may receive them at once by ask- the Saviour to bestow them, by saking the things that keep our arts cold, and by trusting Christ to d his Spirit with his fiery enthu- sm to our souls.

After all, there is no excuse for be- cowardly in Christian service, be- se the forces of evil are in reality weak compared to the forces of the ng of kings. The enemies of the rd are to be driven away like smoke; y are to be melted as wax. We are the side of omnipotence; we have thing to fear.

The Virtue of Honesty †

ONOR and Christianity belong ex- tremely well together. Yet many ople outside the Christian faith do t believe that this is so. Enemies of ristianity like to allege that the ry foundation of Christian experi- ce is false because it rests on faith things which they deny. Sometimes ch ideas creep very close to the ristian fold itself, as in the case of e little boy who defined faith as "be- ving that something is so when you ow it isn't so." Now if Christianity d rest on any such foundation as at it would be impossible to build up an honest character upon it. The Christian would be as badly tangled as poor Launcelot, whose

Honor rooted in dishonor stood,
And faith unfaithful kept him falsely true.

No, we have not followed "cunningly devised fables." We know whom we have believed, and "the foundation of God standeth sure."

But aside from their objection to the Christian's faith outsiders have often objected, and with better reason, to his moral conduct. The Christian should never forget that Christianity will be judged by the kind of life he leads. Those are bitterly sad chapters of history which record how uncivilized or heathen countries have been wronged by representatives of Christian nations. The greatest obstacle the missionary has to overcome in some fields is the influence of his own countrymen who are living lives of sin and dishonor.

It is an easy, fundamental virtue—this virtue of honesty. There is absolutely no excuse for being anything else. A Christian must be honest in big things and little things alike. He must scorn the petty deceptions often resorted to. His conscience must not allow him to cheat the railroad or the car line out of a fare, and then say, with a laugh: "The company is rich, and can afford it." The company can afford to lose the nickel he neglects to pay, but he cannot afford to be the thief he becomes when he keeps it.

The Christian should be careful about his debts. If he is in debt, he must train himself to live carefully and economically until his debts are paid. He must be careful about current expenses and bills. He must be honest with his employer, laboring faithfully, as though his employer's business were his own. He must deal justly with all associated with him or laboring under him. He must interest himself in the injustices of society, and strive to make his community and his nation truly honorable. He must be honest with God, with himself, with his neighbor, with the world.

In Vacation Time*

THE subject assigned for to-day's study is very well worded: "Opportunities and Perils of Vacation." Vacation has many opportunities; it has some perils. We must not spoil the vacation by thinking too much of its perils; if it is a real vacation we need not be too serious about its opportunities. But before we start it is well to consider both sides of the matter.

Vacation means a chance to change the point of view. Our ordinary daily life tends to get us out of focus. We are apt to think either that our work and our location is too important or too unimportant, or perhaps too uninteresting. To find ourselves suddenly somewhere else, looking back upon our daily task, changes matters so that we see it at its true value. Vacation means, of course, a let-go, a chance to regain our nerve, our poise, our grip.

As for the perils, they are the perils of too much letting-go. Restrained from daily duties and conventions, we are apt to be careless in conduct. We must remember that, even on vacation, we are Christians. In speech, in act, in influence, in Sabbath-keeping, we must remember that we are still the representatives of Christ. Take him along with you. Your rest and pleasures will be wholesome and refreshing, just as your work will be vigorous and good, if shared with him.

Study the Scripture references carefully, especially comparing Jonah's journey, taken without God, to the disciples' outings, taken in company with Christ.

Sunday Evening Suppers

You who serve Puffed Grains in the mornings only know but part of their delights. Try serving like crackers in bowls of milk—for luncheon, for supper, for a bedtime dish.

There are no other wafers so crisp and delightful—so thin-walled and airy—so nut-like in flavor.

The grains float like bubbles. The flaky walls—toasted through and through—are thin as tissue paper.

The grains are eight times normal size—four times as porous as bread. A terrific heat has given them a taste like toasted nuts.

And these are whole-grain foods made wholly digestible. That was never done before. So in every way these Puffed Grains form ideal evening meals.

Puffed Wheat, 10c
Puffed Rice, 15c
Except in Extreme West

Used as Confections

Puffed Rice is used in candy making, in frosting cake, as garnish for ice cream. For these Puffed Grains, though easily crushed, have the flavor and crispness of nut-meats.

Many mix them with berries to give a nut-like blend. Children eat the grains dry, like peanuts, when at play. With cream and sugar, as a breakfast dish, there is nothing so enticing.

Puffed Grains are made by Prof. Anderson's process. Within each grain there occur in the making millions of steam explosions.

Thus the cells are created, the thin crisp walls, the delightful almond flavor. In these summer days—days of ready-cooked meals—folks are eating forty million dishes monthly. Keep both of them on hand.

OUR AWFUL ANNUAL FLOOD LOSSES

all sorts of disasters by flood and field that—save and except the ravages of some terrible and fatal disease—the worst of all in its effects upon the mentality of the survivor is that caused by uncontrolled and undirected streams.

A BIG MORAL QUESTION

But if conditions along the Ohio and its affluents are awful and depressing, what about the lower Mississippi? As pointed out with great vigor by prominent men in Louisiana and Mississippi, they can take care of all the water that comes into the big river in normal seasons from Memphis down to the delta, but they cannot provide for, or guard against, the floods which tile drainage, deforestation and modern engineering skill hurl against the defenses of the lower river year after year. This spring the rainfall in Ohio, Indiana, western Pennsylvania and West Virginia was from double to quadruple the normal precipitations. For example: In Logan County, Ohio, where a two-inch rainfall in a week is regarded as heavy, 11.16 inches fell in four days and a half, while in Marion, Wyandot, Richland and Wayne counties, in the same period, the fall varied from 10.15 to 10.61 inches. The Scioto River in summer discharged one-hundredth of one cubic foot per second for each square mile of watershed. It has been pointed out that on the 25th of last March the discharge was more than ten thousand times as much. Multiply these conditions throughout the 210,000 square miles of the Ohio drainage basin and judge what was asked of the Mississippi protection below Cairo, where the Ohio joins the larger stream. It was God's kind providence, not man's foresight, that saved a catastrophe that would have appalled humanity. There was great absorption and evaporation, due to bright sunshine and freedom from rain; otherwise one shudders to think of the losses in Louisiana, Arkansas and Mississippi.

The Mississippi Valley is the drainage basin for most of the United States, and Uncle Sam owns the river and the water. You cannot bridge it, or dike it, or dam it, or turn it without federal permission. If you interfere with your neighbor's drainage or overflow his property with your drainage, you may expect to pay damages if he sues you in a State or Federal court. Ethically, morally, is it not right (not to say expedient) that the lower part of the Mississippi should be relieved of this annual menace, this recurring catastrophe. Without flood-menace and flood-damage it would soon be the most populous and the richest, as it would surely be the most productive, of the nation's wealth-fields.

PLANS FOR PREVENTION

There is no lack of superficial and temporary recognition of the appalling losses by yearly floods on the part of those high in authority, or, in a measure, on the part of the public not directly affected. Our present chief magistrate and his predecessors, Taft and Roosevelt, are on record on the subject, and seven years ago President Roosevelt constituted an authoritative committee, of which Senator Newlands of Nebraska was made chairman, whose duty, after careful observation of the sources and causes of flood damage and upon consultation with the best engineering authorities, was to report upon the most practical, comprehensive and useful method or methods of prevention.

That committee has made its report, which is now before Congress, and its conclusions as to the imperative need for national action and the feasibility thereof are matters of public record. Perhaps the most succinct summary of what the best thought of the country regards as desirable is found in a letter written by Colonel Roosevelt to Hon. John M. Parker of New Orleans, and bearing date of March 5—considerably antedating, be it observed, the disasters following the floods in the Ohio Valley. The letter says:

"The valleys of the Mississippi River and its tributaries cannot be permanently protected from floods unless four things be done:

"First. The Mississippi River must be treated as a unit, with all its tributaries, from source to mouth;

"Second. The levee system must be brought up to standard for its entire length, and thereafter maintained by the Federal Government.

"Third. The levee system must be supplemented by adequate revetments that will protect caving banks; and "Fourth. The levee system must be further supplemented by source-stream control which will lower the crest of the floods in the Mississippi Valley, and thereby relieve the pressure on the levees.

"Source-stream control will mean flood waters conserved for use in the irrigation of dry lands, for the development of hydro-electric power and for the supplementing of the dry season flow for the purposes of navigation.

"Bank revetments will mean prevention of soil erosion, of soil waste, the adoption of a policy, adequate in every way, to put an end to the waste of waters, to the silting up of the river beds through soil erosion, to the denudation of the mountain sides through forest destruction without replanting, and to the periodical flooding of fertile farms by uncontrolled freshets, which form in ever-increasing volume as a result of the changes made in the upper watersheds by man in the name of progress and development."

Civil Engineer Carroll L. Riker has formulated a plan that has aroused a deal of controversy and in which he proposes the condemnation of a strip of lowland, ten miles wide, running direct from the Red River of Arkansas to the Gulf of Mexico. This land, it is contended, would cost only $5,000,000, and the Mississippi in flood could be made to use this area as a spillway, thus reducing a rise of thirty feet in a mile-wide channel to the comparatively harmless height of three feet. It is contemplated, as time and funds are available, to continue this wide channel as far north as St. Louis. The idea is given because of its novelty, and because many eminent public men believe it to be a partial solution.

PERTINENT FACTS

There are myriads of pertinent facts connected with flood destruction in addition to those already given, but it is possible to cite a few only as accenting and impressing the problem.

The Yangste-Kiang in China is 3,000 miles long (with its tributaries) as against the 15,000 of the Mississippi and tributaries, and drains about half as much territory as does our own great stream. While the loss of life resultant from the Chinese river's frequent floods is far greater than any America has to chronicle, the property losses are in no wise comparable.

The Kansas experiment station reports to the U. S. Agricultural Department that the actual losses in 1903 from floods devastating a comparatively small part of the great basin aggregated more than $40,000,000.

M. Yves Guyot gives as the European "cost of fear" per annum (that is, the expenditure made to increase armies and navies) the appalling sum of $2,000,000,000. It is believed that half that sum, were world-peace assured, would greatly minimize the flood-waste throughout the world.

Preliminary and necessarily incomplete hydrographic office computations of Ohio River flood losses this spring aggregated $50,000,000. Ohio State officials claim that the losses in the Scioto, Miami and Muskingum river valleys alone exceed $150,000,000. Some authorities give far larger sums. Probably $100,000,000 is a conservative estimate.

All authorities of competent knowledge agree that floods and by consequence flood losses are increasing in an alarming volume, year by year, in the United States.

Water Supply Paper No. 234, of the U. S. Geological Survey, gives the following estimates of total damage to property by floods in the eight years from 1900 to 1908 (inclusive) as follows:

1900	$45,675,000
1901	45,438,000
1902	55,201,000
1903	97,220,000
1904	78,841,000
1905	98,589,720
1906	73,124,000
1907	118,238,000
1908	237,860,000

Dayton, Ohio, has raised a fund of $2,000,000 to safeguard the city against floods, and it is said that many workingmen mortgaged their homes in order to contribute to this fund.

Senator Newlands says: "Every consideration of national prosperity required that every navigable river with its tributaries should be regarded as a unit from source to mouth, and should be treated as such by the scientific and constructive forces of the country."

Gifford Pinchot, in a recent article, thus records his convictions: "Do forests really influence stream flow? They do. The measurements of the Forest Service and the United States Geological Survey in this country, confirming the results of observers abroad, have settled that question for good and for all. It would be mere waste of time to discuss the matter further."

President Roosevelt: "The American people are fair and patriotic. I cannot believe that when they realize the situation they will permit it to continue. The people of Arkansas and Tennessee, Louisiana and Mississippi cannot do the work, and are well-nigh helpless, unless the nation does its duty and undertakes the work as a whole. Mind you, it is no question of charity on the part of the nation; it is a question of performance of duty."

THE CONCLUSION IN MORALS

Now for the principal reason for this article. It is to impress upon the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, representative as they are of the best moral thought of the country, their immediate responsibility in this matter. Upon each man's and woman's conscience I place the injunction, "You can help to prevent the frightful flood loss and it is your bounden duty to do it and to do it at once."

Your representative and your Senator in Congress may not, probably will not, pay much attention to one or to a dozen letters on this subject of flood-prevention from constituents. He will pay a great deal of attention to hundreds of such letters, repeated now and again, and pointing out that the writers are in deep earnest.

Tell your Congressmen that their slices of what is known as the "pork-barrel," however large, will not conduce to their political longevity if they longer neglect definite action on this subject. Point out that an appropriation for deepening the channel of some usually insignificant stream is of no importance as compared with prevention of the damage wrought by that stream in flood. Educate your Congressmen into a believing certainty that government of, by, and for the people shall not perish from the earth by reason of selfishness, personal greed, or misconception of what would be genuinely popular.

Have You Tried Karo in Your Preserving, Madam?

SO many housewives are using Karo (Crystal White) in their preserving syrup that probably you know all about it. But if you do not, get a can of Karo (Crystal White) from your grocer before you put up any more fruit.

Make your preserving syrup with part Karo (Crystal White) instead of all sugar. Your jams, jellies, preserved and canned fruits will be richer in consistency, with the true flavor of the fresh fruit. Karo (Crystal White) better blends the fruit juices with the sugar, and develops their flavor to perfection. It also prevents jams and jellies from candying.

In Canning, for instance, use these proportions:

CANNING TABLE

5 lbs.	Lb. Sugar	Lb. Karo	Water	Time of Boiling (min.)
Berries	1½	½	1 cup	15 slow
Cherries	Sour 2½ / Sweet 1½	¾ / ¾	1½ pts.	15
Currants	3	1	1 pt.	15
Peaches	1¼	⅝	1 pt.	10 to 15
Pears	1¼	⅝	1½ pts.	15
Plums	2	¾	1 pt.	20

THIS Canning Table is reprinted from our Karo Preserving Book, a wonderfully practical and helpful little guide for making jams, jellies and preserves generally—with full directions for sterilizing preserves so they will keep perfectly. We shall be glad to send you a copy FREE—just send us your name on a post card.

300 CANDLE POWER

SPAIN'S RELIGIOUS STRUGGLE

EVER since the spring of 1910, when the Evangelical Party in Spain began to bring the important matter of entire religious liberty before the general public from their point of view, the question has not been allowed to rest. The Clerical party have for forty years purposely followed the principle in Spain and out of it of representing the evangelical work in Spain as despicable and quite unimportant because the number of the members of the church who are in full communion is so small. They have now formed big organizations and are sounding the alarm, for they are terrified at the power of the ideals and their increasing influence on the people. The present government follows the example of the preceding one under Canalejas, and tries to quiet the evangelicals and that portion of public opinion which sides with them, by offering them a few crumbs. In this way the matter, of course, can not be settled definitely. The latest phases of this fluctuating strife are as follows: The most prominent of all the conflicts last year was that in which the marine Pablo Fernandez was involved. In the summer he was arrested because he would not kneel down during the mass which he had been obliged to attend. After several months' imprisonment he was acquitted by the court martial, but the higher authority was not satisfied and the case was brought before the supreme court in Madrid. On the 14th of December, 1912, the member of parliament, Don Luis Zulueta, asked a question of the government in the Congress, and Count Romanones promised that liberty of conscience would be respected in every way. A few days later the supreme military tribunal condemned Fernandez to six months' imprisonment. The minister of war issued a decree in the end of January, 1913, according to which all the recruits who on entering the army had declared that they were not Roman Catholics, should be excused from attendance at mass on the church festivals. The obligation to take part in acts of Roman Catholic service remains binding on particular occasions, such as the taking of the oath, which ceremony is usually preceded by a mass, or when troops are ordered to take part in a procession. Some time after, Pablo Fernandez, who had suffered the greater part of his sentence, was pardoned.

In the beginning of March the prime minister, Count Romanones, made it known that he was going to issue a decree according to which the children of those dissenting from the Roman Catholic Church should no longer be obliged to learn the Catholic catechism. Now the storm prepared by the clericals burst. Petitions, speeches, newspaper articles, in short, everything was brought to bear on the subject at home and abroad. At the same time it was represented that the government was going to banish all religious and moral teaching from the schools. None of the dissenters had attached any importance to the abovementioned announcement, but when the clericals put their forces in motion the liberal-minded party also came forward. A public meeting which the clericals wished to hold was forbidden by the church authorities, for they did not think it desirable to come into collision with the government just when at last a legate had arrived in Madrid, and a Spanish ambassador had again been sent to the Papal Court. The meeting which the dissenters wished to hold was opposed indirectly; but in spite of all it was held on the 6th of April with great success. In the meantime several hundred state professors and elementary teachers directed a petition to the government requesting that the Roman Catholic religious instruction should no longer be obligatory in the state seminaries, and thus the elementary teachers should be placed on the same footing as the secondary teachers and the professors of the university. This was refused. But on the 25th of April a decree was issued exempting the children whose parents profess another religion than the Roman Catholic, from attendance at the Catholic religious instruction. The children of freethinkers are therefore still obliged to attend. This is evidently not a final solution of the problem. Besides that, we do not yet know whether the interpretation of the decree will be favorable or the reverse. It is possible that the government gives with one hand and takes away with the other, as has already happened in other instances. GEORGE FLIEDNER.

Madrid, April 30, 1913.

Another Military Mass

IN THE presence of fully 6,000 soldiers and civilians, the first military mass ever held in Texas occurred in the camp of the Second Division of the United States Army at Texas City, Texas, Sunday morning, April 27. Army chaplains of all faiths united in making it a success and sat in the sanctuary during the ceremony.

The altar was situated just back of the camp of the Eleventh Infantry, near the bay shore, and was resplendent with American and regimental colors. Choirs from Galveston and Houston, the Fourth Field Artillery Band and others assisted in the incidental music.

At the consecration a triple salute was fired by a detail from the Fourth Field Artillery and a bugle was blown three times.

Very Rev. J. M. Irwin, president of St. Mary's Seminary, LaPorte, and a former army chaplain, preached the sermon, taking as his subject "The Church Militant." Knights of Columbus from Galveston and Houston were present in large delegations.—Boston Pilot (Roman Catholic), May 10, 1913.

THE DEATH OF DR. BRIGGS

THE Rev. Professor Charles Augustus Briggs, D.D., died at his home in New York on Monday, June 9, at the age of seventy-two years, having just completed his fortieth year as a teacher in Union Theological Seminary.

Dr. Briggs came into prominence twenty years ago when he was accused of heresy before the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church, and suspended from the ministry of that denomination. Union Seminary took the side of its representative and withdrew from its connection with the Presbyterian denomination, becoming an independent school. Of late years the bitterness attending this unfortunate controversy has largely passed away, and now candidates from Union Seminary are ordained in large numbers to the Presbyterian ministry.

The point at issue between Dr. Briggs and the Assembly was in reality merely a definition of inspiration. He held that the Bible was inspired, but declared that he had a right to subject its pages to the tests of criticism and was not compelled to believe all parts of it infallible and accurate. After leaving the Presbyterian ministry he became an Episcopalian and was ordained a clergyman of that denomination. His scholarship received wide recognition at home and abroad, and he was greatly admired for his noble character and intense earnestness.

A New Hernia Appliance

This Invention Holds More Firmly, Comfortably and Surely Than Any Truss

Sent on Trial

The new Brooks Appliance for rupture thoroughly meets every test and every requirement that it is being ordered by the U. S. Department and is rapidly coming to be recognized as the most reliable, comfortable and dependable support ever invented. The Brooks Appliance is fitted with an Automatic Cushion which follows every movement of the body, always covers the ruptured spot and always where it should be to do the most good. The part of the cushion which comes in contact with the skin is soft, pliable gum rubber which clings closely, so that irritation and slipping is impossible, and yet it is cool and comfortable because of the constant circulation of air through it. It is simple of construction, so there is nothing to get out of order—nothing that can break.

We are selling this Appliance under a positive guarantee of money refunded if not satisfactory. We do not guarantee to cure any more than any doctor will guarantee to cure his patients. We do guarantee to furnish a perfect fitting Appliance, one that will give the wearer solid comfort and retain the protrusion at all times and under all circumstances.

The purchaser is the sole judge and if for any reason whatever (which does not have to be furnished us) it is returned, the price paid will be refunded in full.

Man and Wife Fatten on Grape-Nuts.

The notion that meat is necessary for eal strength and the foundation of solid lesh is now no longer as prevalent as ormerly.

Excessive meat eaters are usually slug-ish a part of the time because they are ot able to fully digest their food, and he undigested portion is changed into vhat is practically a kind of poison that cts upon the blood and nerves, thus get-ing all through the system.

"I was a heavy meat eater," writes an Ills. man, "and up to two years ago, was n very poor health. I suffered with in-digestion so that I only weighed 95 pounds.

"Then I heard about Grape-Nuts food and decided to try it. My wife laughed at me at first, but when I gained to 125 pounds and felt so fine, she thought she would eat Grape-Nuts, too. Now she is fat and well and has gained 40 pounds. We never have indigestion any more and seldom feel the desire for meat.

"A neighbor of ours, 68 years old, was troubled with indigestion for years, and was a heavy meat eater. Now since he has been eating Grape-Nuts regularly, he says he is well and never has indigestion.

ANSWERED PRAYERS

MRS. J. O. S., of South Brownsville, Pa., acknowledges answer to prayer for her brother's restoration to health. W. L., of Long Batton, Ohio, gives thanks for the healing of his son; Mrs. V. T. B., of Petersburg, N. Y., for the recovery of her little grandson from a severe illness.

A wife writes: "I wish to acknowledge God's goodness to me in answering my prayers for my husband. I prayed that he might be led to see the evil of drink. He was saved from his sin, and is now an elder in God's church." Miss M. L. writes from Buckingham, Va., "I want to add my testimony to your Answered Prayer column. God has answered many prayers for me, for which I am earnestly grateful. I watch every week for this column, and have gotten much comfort from it. When we earnestly and with faith call upon him he hears and answers."

A sad, beautiful, triumphant story comes in a letter from K. B. H., of Brownsville, Tenn.: "I have had several prayers answered. In February a dear young relative was caught in a sawmill and injured so no one thought he could possibly live. He was paralyzed from his breast down. He was not a professor of religion, and I prayed earnestly to God to spare him until he trusted in and accepted him as his Saviour. He still lives—a sweet, submissive, sunny Christian although paralyzed, with no feeling from waist down. I am frequently put to shame by hearing of his cheerful, bright, sweet acceptance of his affliction. He is just twenty-two years old, and was a strong, active young man."

Mrs. H. C., of Belleville, Wis., writes: "I want to acknowledge God's goodness in answering my prayers in restoring me to health. I believe God hears and answers prayer. He has answered mine many times." A reader from Kenwood, N. Y., writes: "I enjoy the Answered Prayer column so much. I wish to acknowledge God's answer to prayer in restoring to health a sick sister. It was thought that she could not survive, but she recovered to help and bless many lives, and still continues well and strong though quite aged. I feel that many other prayers also have been answered for me."

C. A. K., of Berger, Mo., writes: "I wish to acknowledge through your paper that God has answered my prayer and helped me in a matter that worried me greatly." Again the good news of a soul saved. Mrs. D. N. E. writes from Bow, Wash.: "God has answered many prayers for me; also prayer for an unconverted friend."

What Sanatogen will do for your Health

"IF you have taken Sanatogen regularly three times a day you will have gained, in a few weeks, a fund of added health, nerve strength and a general sense of well-being which you cannot fail to feel and appreciate." This is what thousands of intelligent men and women who have partaken of the benefits of Sanatogen would tell you, did they enjoy your acquaintance; this is also what thousands of practising physicians might say, for it is a fact that over 18,000 of them have written us of the remarkable benefits they have observed from the use of Sanatogen. They tell us in these letters how Sanatogen infuses new strength and endurance into weak and nervous people, how wonderfully it improves digestion, how quickly its concentrated nourishment builds up the blood and gives new tone and strength to the entire system. The overworked business man, mothers (especially nursing mothers), men and women who have made too heavy drafts upon their vitality, will find in Sanatogen a splendid source of renewed health and strength. And remember Sanatogen is a natural, healthful food and tonic—purest protein and organic phosphorus—free from anything unnatural or harmful, so that little children can take it with nothing but benefit. You can obtain Sanatogen of any good druggist; it comes to you as a fine white powder which you can pleasantly mix with milk, chocolate, etc.

Sanatogen is sold by good druggists everywhere, in three sizes, from $1.00

Delicacy of color and beauty of pattern make many of this season's "wash goods" so attractive that you may forget to consider whether the goods will wash safely.

But you need not be disappointed if you use Ivory Soap.

Ivory Soap, because of its extreme purity, mildness and freedom from alkali, will cleanse the most delicate muslins, cambrics, prints, etc., without fading the colors. Handle the garments with a little special care, as suggested below, and they will retain all their original beauty.

To Wash Delicate-hued Muslins, Cambrics, Prints, etc.

Soak for ten minutes in salt water, a half cupful of common salt to two gallons of cold water. Wring out and wash quickly in Ivory Soap suds. Rinse in bluing water. Starch in boiled starch. Hang in shade. Wash only one thing at a time.

To Wash Lawns, Organdies, Batistes, etc.

Wash in warm, weak Ivory Soap suds with salt in suds. Rinse twice in hard water with some salt added. Make smooth, thin starch and put this in last rinse water with a pinch of powdered alum.

The NATION'S UNKNOWN TROPHIES

BY THEODORE RAND-McNALLY

The Avon Flag—History Unknown

The Jack of the Guerrière, Captured in 1812

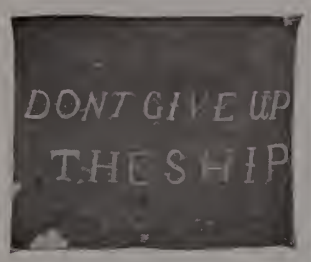
'TWAS many and many a year ago" somewhere on land or sea that brave men fought and died that their countrymen might see the visible trophies of their victories. Yet in the midst of that wonderful collection of the souvenirs of battle that has lately been put on permanent exhibition in Trophy Hall at the Naval Academy in Annapolis are the nation's unknown trophies. Flags that were captured in now forgotten engagements are hung in the cases side by side with those whose glorious history is known. That the historical data of the trophy flags is so complete is due in no small measure to the efforts of Professor Harold Connott Washburn, the civilian instructor in English at the Naval Academy. For over a year he has worked quietly but thoroughly, until to-day only a few of the flags are marked unknown. Two of these souvenirs of forgotten battles are British flags. One is a jack marked Avon and nothing more; the other is the ensign of a warship, and is marked Beresford. From the condition of both of these flags it is supposed that they date back to the War of 1812, but history gives no record of ships bearing those names being sent to American waters by Great Britain. Another of the mystery flags is shown on this page. It is the "814" flag. In great white figures this number appears on a field of blue, and the entire flag is bordered with red. From some engagement in the war with the Moorish pirates the flag that the officers at Annapolis came to call the "house flag" seems to have come. Yet no one knows where that battle was fought or under what circumstances of heroic sacrifice it was added to the long list of the trophies of our naval victories.

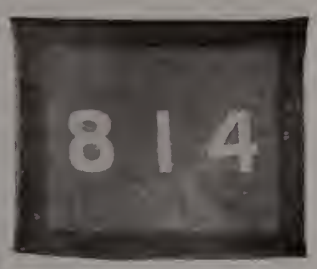
Formerly in the list of unknown flags appeared two Mexican cavalry guidons. Wonderful silver bullion work, bearing the legend Escuadron Activo de Vera Cruz, distinguished one, and the other is of dark green cloth fringed with red and marked En. Ao. de Jalapa. Long and patient search has led Professor Washburn to believe that he has solved the mystery of these trophies; yet should these descriptions recall memories to some survivor of the war with Mexico, Professor Washburn will be glad to add to the nation's knowledge of the flags. A beautiful guidon, bearing the lion and unicorn blazonry of England, and marked "John Wilson, Bedford, Long Island," still awaits the discovery of its history. In 1812 a John Wilson, of Long Island, organized a battery of light artillery, and it is thought that the flag may have belonged to him. But the devices upon it are older than that date, for George III officially changed the royal blazonry of England in the year 1801, and it is doubted if as enthusiastic a supporter of his king as



Admiral Perry's Battle Flag, Flown on Lake Erie

MRS. AMELIA FOWLER

Who Originated the Method and Supervised the Work of Flag Preservation



Probably a Civil War Flag History Unknown

Wilson must have been would have employed a flag which was not correct in every official detail.

The gathering together and setting in official form of the histories of all the nation's trophies comes only as a part of a great work that has been done at Annapolis during the last year. It was over two years ago that Captain William Carey Cole, who was then the commandant at the Naval Academy, discovered, packed away in wooden boxes, the flags which had cost so dearly in patriotic sacrifice in days gone by. Captain Cole tried his best to stir up some enthusiasm for the preservation of these flags, but met with very little success. Finally he appeared upon the floors of Congress with a few of the flags in their tattered and moth-eaten condition and one flag which had been preserved so that it would last a thousand years. Congress was not enthusiastic on the subject, and it was not until the tattered remnants of Admiral Perry's battleflag "Don't Give Up the Ship" fluttered to the floor from the outstretched arms of the naval officer that the tide turned, and before he left the floor of the House Captain Cole had the pleasure of hearing Congress vote $30,000 for the restoration of our national trophies. To-day, as one enters Trophy Hall at the Naval Academy, there appear before him in cases about the walls and stretched across the ceiling those flags which mark the naval successes of the United States. Almost every battle in which the ships of our country have met an enemy is represented in this wonderful collection. Most of the flags come from the battles of the War of 1812, and Perry's battleflag is the center and the inspiration of all this group. It is only a square of dark blue bunting, but across it in straggling letters, evidently cut by a sailor from some odd piece of white cotton that was at hand, are the words of Captain James Lawrence as he was carried below in that ill-fated fight between the Chesapeake and the Shannon, "Don't Give Up the Ship." This is the flag that Oliver Hazard Perry flew on Lake Erie on that eventful September day in 1813. First at the masthead of the Lawrence it gave the signal for the beginning of the fight, and later, when that ship was sunk by the fire of the British, Perry carried the flag over his arm as he was rowed to the Niagara. "This is the battleflag under which I wish to fight," he said. Around this relic of two great naval heroes are the captured flags that date back to the wonderful campaign of Lake Erie. From all of the captured ships of Captain Barclay, who led the British squadron, the flags have been preserved. The list is a long and glorious one. As one consults the numbers and the catalogue he reads that here are the flags of the Detroit, the Chippewa, the Hunter, the Little Belt, the Lady Prevost, the Queen Charlotte, and a number of others. Nor are the lake battles the only ones which have given their trophies to serve through the years as reminders of past valor. The jack, the ensign and the pennant of the Guerrière recall the first successful action of an American warship on the high seas. "Old Ironsides" in her first battle with this ship that the British had captured a year before from the French made her first great success and brought home these historic trophies. Then on down through the war with the Algerian pirates, through the campaign against the Chinese pirates, through the expedition that went to Korea to mete out punishment for the destruction of the trading ship Sherman, into the days of our own memory of the war with Spain and the later fighting against the Filipinos, the trophies are here and preserved so that time can never harm them.

Some almost forgotten incidents of our national history are recalled by these tattered old flags. The United States and France have never declared war upon each other, yet among the trophies are two French tri-colors. They are the ensigns of the frigate L'Insurgente and the corvette Le Berceau. In 1799 and 1800 the United States Government backed with force the protests of New England shipowners against the searching of their vessels by foreign warships for the naturalization papers of the seamen. So without a declaration of war a clash took place between the two French vessels and two American frigates, the Constellation and the Boston, and the French ships were captured.

A group of wonderfully decorative Oriental flags and pennants is formed by the trophies of our navy's two greatest punitive expeditions. Here is the Chinese pirates' flag taken by the crew of a pinnace from a battery at Coolan on the Island of Tylo near Hongkong. There are upwards of thirty brilliant trophies of Rear-Admiral John Rogers's Korean expedition in 1871, and an enormous black silk flag bearing a legend in scarlet Chinese characters recalls to mind the heroic work of the American legation guard at Peking during the Boxer rebellion in 1900.

There are only a few "Old Glories" in this collection of a hundred and seventy-three historic flags, but each of these is connected with some incident that gives it the honor of its present position. There is the thirty-one starred flag that flew as an ensign beside the sunrise flag of Japan when the close-shut doors of that island kingdom were pried open for American commerce. The old flag that Lieutenant Charles Haywood defended so gallantly in 1847 at San José, Lower California, is there to recall the story of how he and his tiny garrison held an old mission house for over three months against an overwhelming Mexican force. Here, too, are a few reminders of history's saddest war—our own Civil War. Side by side in the one case are draped the ensign of the Union man-of-war Kearsarge and the stars and bars of the ensign of the Confederate cruiser Albemarle. The most recent addition to the collection is the ensign of the battleship Maine, which was recovered fourteen years after the catastrophe in Havana Harbor.

Great splashes of gold and red are formed by the wonderful silk banners of the Spanish ships which were captured during the Spanish-American War. These, displayed so that their embroidered armorial bearings may be easily distinguished, fill five big alcoves at the head of the white marble entrance stairway of the building.

The work o preservation entirely attributable to a Massachusetts lady who ha devoted her life to this field of patriotic endeavor. Som years ago Mrs. Amelia Fowler undertook the preserva tion of the Civil War flags which are displayed in th State House at Boston. This work was so successful tha when the nation's trophies were to be restored Mr Fowler was selected for the task. The method whic she has followed is entirely of her own invention, thoug she acknowledges her indebtedness to some tapestries which were made thousand years ago by the Duchess of Normandy and her ladies.

The old worn and tattered flags were spread upon great squares of speciall woven Irish linen, and then with linen or silk thread dyed by Mrs. Fowle to match exactly the color of the tattered remnants these were fastene to the linen. To preserve the appearance of the flag and yet secure it perma nently to the sustaining background Mrs. Fowler invented a special openwor stitch which she taught to the fifty-seven girls and women who worked so dil gently under her direction on these invaluable flags.

The dyeing of the silks and linens used was a work calling for a consummat knowledge of colors. The brilliant reds and blues and greens and yellows o the old flags have softened and faded until in many instances they demande hours of patient labor to match even a few square feet of a single flag.

The result of Mrs. Fowler's method of preservation is that where the rem nants of the flags were in good condition or comparatively so, like the flag whic Admiral Perry flew in Japan when he made the first compact of friendshi between the United States and the Mikado's empire, the stitches are invisib from a distance of a few feet. Where the flag was almost all gone the stitch appear as a ghost of the past across the background of the gray line The restoration in every case is as remarkable as that of a perfectly restore oil painting. The British royal standard, which fills the center of the ceilin of Trophy Hall, is a splendid example of this aspect of the work. Professo Washburn said that this flag was "in about as fine pieces as chopped hay," y to-day it looks as if it had just left the hands of the weaver. A great deal o historic value is attached to this flag as it is the only British royal standard i the possession of a foreign nation. In 1813 Commodore Isaac Chauncey an General Montgomery Pike captured the city of York, now Toronto, and too from the Parliament House there this royal standard.

That Mrs. Fowler's work is influenced by the highest motives of patriotis has been shown time and time again by the comments she has made to visitor "Simply as emblems of glory and sacrifice," she says, "these flags are of r interest to us in this day, but as indicative of the inspired courage and valo which made possible the progress and achievement which our nation is enjo ing to-day they are beyond valuation.

"To me this work marks a stage in the evolution from war to peace and ca be counted on as a factor to lead the mind from bloodshed to the higher civi zation. Anyone who sees the repose in which they have attained it must al see the ultimate to which they point with insistent love and power.

"This great country of ours has been and is steeped in commercialism. It blinded to the fact that when national greatness has been achieved it also ha to be maintained. Other factors besides money-getting are required to 'hold th fort.' Nothing can be more impressive than the preservation of the flags tha figured in the construction of our greatness, nor can anything better open th way to show where real greatness and power lie."

TOPICS OF INTEREST AT HOME AND ABROAD

—The prospect of a $5,000 check recently cheered the home of a Chicago woman. A jury in the circuit court awarded her that amount against four saloonkeepers for selling intoxicants to her husband. She charged that she was deprived of her husband's wages because the saloonkeepers sold him liquor, and that she was compelled to support her three small children while her husband was spending time in the Bridewell penitentiary.

—The United States training ship Illinois, carrying 250 naval cadets, was at Kiel, Germany, during the regatta week at the end of June. Elaborate entertainments for the cadets, who were the guests of the German Navy, were carried out under the direction of Commander Rey-Ed, the German Naval attache at Washington, who is now in Germany. The Illinois will visit Muerwik, the German Annapolis, on the Baltic, where athletic contests will take place between the American and German middies.

—Five persons were killed and over a score more or less seriously injured on June 12 when the second section of the westbound Boston express on the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad crashed into the rear of the first section. Since the accident, one more name has been added to the death list, and it has been learned that six others were dangerously injured. The first section of the train had stopped at Stamford, Conn., at 5:48 P.M. to exchange its steam locomotive for an electric. The second section crashed into it, the engine completely telescoping its last car. A full investigation of the accident is now under way, and the evidence which has so far been given leads to the conclusion that it was to a great extent due to defects in the mechanism and running system of the railroad. No verdict has been returned by the coroner's jury up to our date of going to press.

THE NEW COMMISSIONER OF INDIAN AFFAIRS

This photograph was made in the office of the Secretary of the Interior at Washington, D. C., on June 4, when Mr. Cato Sells was sworn into office as the new Indian Commissioner. Chiefs representing a number of the most important Indian tribes were present. The central figures of the picture are F. K. Lane, Secretary of the Interior, and, seated at his right, the new Indian Commissioner, Mr. Sells.

—Army officers who have served in the Philippines were interested tremendously in the despatches from Manila, telling of the battle at Bagsag, in the Island of Jolo, where the intrenchments of rebellious Moros were taken by American forces. The Moros of Jolo and the Sulus generally are a fanatical lot. For the last 300 years they have been the pirates of the Eastern Seas, and for more than two centuries the Spaniards found it impossible to control them and were able to hold only a few isolated forts in the Sultan's dominion. "Probably no fiercer battle since American occupation," is the description by Brigadier General Pershing of the battle with the Moros in his report to the War Department. The Moros made desperate attempts to rush the American lines, but were beaten back and overwhelmed. Their leader, Amil and several other noted outlaws were reported killed, but the total loss of the Moros is not known. On March 5 last the situation was regarded as acute. The Moros of Mindanao had become peaceable, yet in one island rebellion of a sort still raged. It was not an insurrection in exactly the sense in which the word had been used in the Philippines, but in an extinct crater at Bagsag, or Buntad, were gathered men, women, and children, estimated to number about 3,000, who were defying authority, and behind intrenchments were daring the American soldiers to come up and take their arms.

AN AFRICAN CHURCH JUBILEE

THE Church Missionary Society of England began its work of evangelization in West Africa a little over a century ago. Such great progress had been made by the year 361 that it was felt possible to place increased esponsibility for future advancement upon the ative converts. Hence, the Sierra Leone Native astorate Church was formed in that year with a onstitution similar to that of the Episcopal Church England.

After a toilsome existence of half a century in olding aloft the cross of Christ and striving to oread the Gospel among pagan tribes, it can be aid of the Native Pastorate Church hat it is a self-supporting body. n addition to this it is a missionry church, supporting missions mong the Timnis, Limbahs, Yaunkas and Mendis of Sierra eone. It also started and mainained missionary work in the agos and Niger districts of Nieria. Rev. Samuel Adjai Crowher, the rescued slave boy, who was ducated in Sierra Leone, and who vas the first African admitted to he ministry, became the first ishop of the Niger in 1864. Bishop Crowther and his associates were ioneers on the Niger River in a very real sense, as they took up heir work there before the British Government began to exert influence and activity in that part of West Africa. This emphasizes the heroic work of the Native Pastorate Church, which has advanced from nine districts in 1861 to seventeen in 1913. Three former mission districts are now self-supporting stations. The secretary of the Church Missionary Society in Sierra Leone says of the Native Pastorate Church: "As a church it has not lowered the flag. Individual pastors may fail of their duty, but the church as an organized body has kept to the standard of duty."

The above facts add special importance and interest to the jubilee celebrations of the Native Pastorate Church, which were held in Freetown, Sierra Leone, in February of this year. There were conferences on problems of evangelization, education and administration. There was a great meeting for women and a special children's gathering. Consideration was given to the duty of strengthening the work among the Mohammedans and pagans. After the main meetings in Freetown minor celebrations were held in the outlying districts.

That which made the celebrations unusually noteworthy and historic was the presence of Mr. and Mrs. T. F. Victor Buxton. Mr. Buxton is the chairman of the African section of the Church Missionary Society in London and is the great-grandson of Sir Thomas Fowell Buxton, who is known in England as "the man who broke the fetters of the slave." The coming to Freetown of a lineal offspring of a great African benefactor brought sincere joy to the descendants of liberated slaves, who made his visit the occasion to remember with gratitude the philanthropies of the past. An immense public gathering was held in Wilberforce Memorial Hall to present various addresses to Mr. and Mrs. Buxton. On the day of their departure an immense throng, representing the city, its churches and schools, collected to bid them farewell.

ONE OF THE JUBILEE SERVICES ON THE CAMPUS OF FOURAH BAY COLLEGE

Mr. Buxton said in the course of an address: "Your future as a people rests ultimately not with your friends in England but with yourselves. Those who already occupy positions of importance in government service or in other departments have a great opportunity of proving to the world that Africa can produce men not only of intellectual ability but of high character, independent judgment and spotless integrity. But it is not only those in prominent positions, but every member of his community, who has a part to play in the advancement of his people. A special obligation rests upon parents and those who have to do with the training of the young. Let the home life be pure and holy, so that when young men and women go out into life and face the temptations of the world they may have the memory of God-fearing parents and happy homes to help them in the battle of life." This touches the kernel of the problem of African advancement and the building up of communities capable of propagating the principles of Christianity.

Some of the exercises of the jubilee celebrations were held at Fourah Bay College, an institution which was founded in 1828 for the training of native ministers and teachers. Among those who have been graduated from this school nine became canons, four archdeacons and three bishops of the Church of England. Fourah Bay College is affiliated with Durham University, England.

St. George's Cathedral was the scene of the most impressive services in connection with the jubilee. This church edifice was started in 1817 and was opened for divine service in 1828. During recent years it has been extensively remodeled.

Bishop Walmsley, who is in charge of the diocese of Sierra Leone, bore a great burden in directing the celebrations, but he did so in a spirit of comity and optimism. Bishop Johnson of Western Equatorial Africa was also present and greatly aided in making the celebrations a success. The other denominations in Freetown entered heartily into the jubilee. There was a strong feeling of church fellowship and it is hoped that this will lead to a larger co-operation of the forces of evangelism in Sierra Leone.

JIMMY'S SANE FOURTH

BY ARTHUR H. HOWLAND

A Story Complete in This Issue

ACCORDING to Jimmy the Fourth of July plans at Brandon were altogether too sane —and too safe. What was the use of being a prospective American citizen anyhow, if one could not smell gunpowder and make things roar on Independence Day? What would become of patriotism and heroism and all those fine things that the Fifth Reader was full of it there wasn't at least once a year something to remind one of a battlefield? Thus reasoned Jimmy—alone in the woodshed.

Surely the combination of circumstances in which Jimmy found himself was particularly distressing. Ever since last Fourth of July things had begun to go steadily wrong, and the culmination of woes had been almost overwhelming. Last year the other gang had loaded a big log pretty nearly full of gunpowder up in the woods on the hill just back of the village, had gone up before midnight and precisely at twelve touched it off and made a perfectly gloriously thunderous roar which fairly shook the foundations of the buildings of Brandon. Jimmy's gang had plotted carefully and thoroughly to go the opposition one better this year and blow up a rock with real dynamite. Sam Akers's father was foreman at the neighboring stone-crusher and Sam had promised to deliver the dynamite duly. But woodshed conferences had been overheard, and parental and municipal authority invoked with dire results. Not only was the use of dynamite to be effectively forbidden, but the whole town had been won over to the "safe and sane" idea, and there were not even to be any firecrackers.

This would surely have been gloom enough, but it was only the beginning. The next item of the universal misfortune was that the big firemen's parade was to be held over at Springdale this year instead of at Brandon. And that deprived the town of the chance of decking itself out in flags and bunting to welcome all the fire companies of the county and even some from below the State line and having a bewilderingly gorgeous time with bands, ice cream and fireworks. Still, if the celebration was to be over at Springdale there was some compensation, for that gave one the delights of a journey thither by train with the firemen and the band from Brandon—all the firemen, that is, who do not accompany the apparatus over the country roads. But Jimmy couldn't even go to Springdale—because—because—and this made him ashamed of his rebellious grief—because his mother was sick.

He was a good patriot, and liked gunpowder, but he was a fairly good nurse too, and no call of duty had ever been clearer than his call to stay home and take care of his mother to-day. Jimmy was the man of the house. It was two years since his father had died, and his sturdy young shoulders had been growing constantly more erect and strong under their growing burdens. There was a sister, and a little brother, and a baby. And Jimmy found it rather strenuous business running the outdoor end of the establishment, superintending the household errands, helping his mother with the transportation department of her dressmaking business, and giving first aid in the kitchen. But he was a good scout, was Jimmy, and all these things came in the day's work, along with arithmetic and history, and were consequently to be done with a stout heart—and a whistle—that is, of course, a whistle whenever one was not in the school.

But this was a bit too stern a battle—even for the Fourth of July. He was genuinely sorry for his mother, and genuinely anxious to try to make her day in the hot sick-room comfortable; but to have heard the band marching down to the station, and the fife and drum corps leading a fire company to the train, to have listened to the yelling and the laughter, to have heard the fire engine and the hook and ladder go jangling down Main Street on their way across country to Springdale, and then to realize that one could not even console oneself with a single firecracker—it was all somewhat tough. He was glad Frances and Dick were out of the way anyhow. They had gone with Uncle Jack and Aunt Lizzie to the celebration. They should not see how much he cared—and he knew he could keep smiling all the time he was in his mother's room.

Jimmy's doleful meditations were interrupted by an ominous and totally unexpected sound. He had expected soon to be summoned by the bell at his mother's bedside. He was going in in a minute more, anyway, for it was nearly time to peel the potatoes for dinner, a task that was rather more appallingly odious than any other single thing Jimmy could think of, with the possible exception of washing dishes. Frances was getting almost old enough now to wash dishes, but she could not be trusted with the potato knife. Since potato-peeling was in itself such an unattractive task Jimmy always made it a point to enliven it with the jauntiest airs in his whistling repertoire.

But instead of rising to answer the call of his mother's bell or to go down in the cellar for the potatoes Jimmy sprang to his feet from quite a different incentive. The fire gong was ringing. Sanders County still used the locomotive tire gongs which so mystify city folks on their arrival in certain rural localities. It is a deadly sound at any hour of the day or night—the sledge-hammer blows on the suspended steel ring. Now it sounded out clear and determined—the kind of a blow that meant a big fire, Jimmy knew.

What would happen? All the fire apparatus and firemen were out of town; only a few men left behind in the village; all the boys gone. And fire—fire—fire! And he, Jimmy Rouse, defrauded out of a great plot, denied all gunpowder, kept at home from the celebration, doomed to peel potatoes—and now, now—doomed to stay home from the fire!

But he could not stay home. Not only was it more than mortal flesh could endure, but duty called him there as well as here. He must go and help put the fire out. Just then deliverance appeared in the person of the stalwart matron from the second house, who came running in the front gate.

FOLLOWING JESUS

*A SERMON BY REV. C. A. MUTCH

TEXT. "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow me." Matt. 16: 24

THERE are perhaps no two words in our English Bible which are so pregnant with infinite possibilities and so superlatively magnificent in their ultimate results, and that so fully bind Omnipotence with human weakness, as the last two words of the text if they are heeded. There are others of profound import, the meaning of which we have not yet fathomed; there are words and phrases which bring into prominence certain qualities necessary to perfected character—that emphasize certain states of attainment, or that foreshadow the glory of redemption when it shall have been completed, and magnify the grace of God to fallen man far beyond what man could even think. All this is freely granted; yet I am stating a truth which is apparent to all when I say there are no two words, perhaps, in our Bible so all-inclusive in their ultimate results as these.

What does it mean to follow Christ? It means revilings and scourgings and thorns; it means losses and crosses; it has meant cruel persecution, the dungeon and the stake; sometimes it requires the forsaking of father and mother, wife and children, houses and lands. It means also justification, sanctification, redemption; it means sonship; it means also power and victory and endless life; it means enlargement and development and growth, until we shall have come to the fulness of the measure of the stature of Christ. And there is nothing beyond that. To follow Christ there are three things we must do, and, as I understand it, only three:

To follow Christ is to leave the world. But what is meant by the term "world"? In the Scriptures it has various meanings, and if we are not careful to distinguish them, we shall fall into serious error. Sometimes it means the whole universe, as in Rom. 1: 20. Sometimes it means the earth on which we live, Matt. 4: 8. Sometimes it means the inhabitants of the earth, as in John 1: 29. Lastly it means the inhabitants of the earth, whose practices, usages, customs are simply in material things. It is an order or sphere touching man's life, affecting man's life, shaping, molding, fixing his character wholly in the realm of the material.

The Standards of the World

The world lives upon a plane far below that standard set by Infinite Wisdom. It acts according to and in harmony with those principles which minister only to selfishness and greed; that warp the judgment, stifle conscience, blunt the sensibilities, so that the soul is indeed dead in trespasses and sins. What do we mean by leaving the world? What does it include? What is involved in it? Does leaving the world mean getting out of it in the sense of dying and entering a world where conditions for service, for development, are perfect? No. (John 17: 15.) Neither does it mean to withdraw from society and shut ourselves up in cloisters, monasteries, etc., though this conception has had frequent expression by many of Christ's followers. Man belongs to two worlds, and may be in active communication with both. Nowhere does Christ teach us to undervalue the world and its legitimate concerns. The claims of this world's lawful authorities always received his ready acknowledgment. (Mark 12: 17.) The social obligations imposed by his religion form one of his most constant themes. Love, not that sentimental thing so often in evidence, but that which finds expression in whole-hearted service, is the test of discipleship. (Matt. 25: 34-46.) "So far, indeed, is he from any undervaluation of the present life that we know of no teacher in any age whose principles, carried into effect, would so ameliorate the material aspects and social relationships."

Man is in communion with two worlds, and may fulfil the claims in each, and so fulfil the law of Christ. One should be diligent in business; but there are times—and they are of frequent occurrence—when one's business clashes with the business of the kingdom, and the danger is to sacrifice the spiritual interests. When that is done, man is dominated, at least for a time, by what is called the "spirit" of the world. It is this spirit that Christ condemns. It is this world the disciple of Christ must leave, for the ethics of its business, of its pleasures, of its successes, are false. Its standards are false. They rest upon selfishness and greed. The Brotherhood of Man is not an article in the world's creed. The law of the jungle is the law of the world. "Get there!" is the slogan we hear repeated constantly. Success is its object, and when it has been attained it covers a multitude of sins. The one article of the world's creed so admirably expressed by David Harum is: "Do unto the other fellow what he would do to you, but do it first." I repeat, this is the world the disciple of Christ must leave. He must get above it and keep above it if he would be what he ought to be.

Leaving and Leading the World

To leave the world, to act contrary to prevailing custom, refusing to yield to the pressure to conform to its pleasures, social customs, business methods, and vulgar fashions in the face of cruel criticism and perhaps of threatened ostracism; with a full knowledge of what one may expect to meet with if the principles of our holy religion shall find expression as His followers in all our relationships, requires courage of the highest sort. One must have invincible determination; a purpose that does not falter nor even hesitate to do the right as God gives him to see the right; a faith that does not tremble when on the brink of what the world calls failure; a love for righteousness and square dealing so mighty that one could cheerfully accept the condition of Lazarus with his sores and poverty, rather than the ease and luxury of Dives—the man who is rich by means and methods the world regards as legitimate. He who will thus live will suffer the agony of the cross, but it is the price each must pay if he would follow Christ.

Leaving the world means the crucifixion of self. Crucifixion of self not only means suffering, but primarily it means death. As Christ had his cross, so surely the one who would follow him also has his cross. The central fact of Christianity is the cross. By that standard we are measured; by it every act is weighed; by it the worth of our service is computed. The cross faces two ways: the past and the future. It is the symbol of two things: life and death. Everything we do, whether singly or collectively, has its value only as it exemplifies the principle for which the cross stands, viz., self-sacrifice.

Human nature has never been able to reconcile itself to the cross; it is not likely that it ever will. The cross has always been a stumbling-block to the ritualist and foolishness to the advocate of progressive thought falsely so called. In this connection it is well to remember that leaving the lower things as a means of gaining the higher is not peculiar to Christianity. It is one of the laws of progress in every realm in which man has a part. Everything that has ministered to the welfare of men or of nations has come by the way of the cross. This is true of the intellectual, political, moral, and spiritual worlds. It is the one law that operates in each, and perhaps with equal force. It is the law of life. It is the law of progress. It is fundamental to right achievement. It knows no exceptions. One must always lose the lower if he would gain the higher.

To follow Christ is to lead the world. The Christian is in the world to lead it in all its manifold activities, and these should be but so many modes of expressing the life he now lives. He lives upon a higher plane and he is to help others occupy these higher levels of life. The simple fact that he lives upon this higher, holier, diviner level, places him under increased obligations to those below him. His superiority not only entitles him to leadership but demands it. It is in the very nature of things that he should lead. It does not follow necessarily that he is superior in mental endowment, or possesses greater wealth, or excels in all those things deemed essential to leadership; but he is superior in spiritual endowment; he is mightier in heart-power and therefore superior in motive, in aspiration and in vision. The child of God is led by the Spirit of God and everything he does is performed as it stands related to the kingdom of God. If all were controlled by the principles of the Gospel, there would be no war between capital and labor, for there would be no occasion for strikes and boycotts. The social questions, as we know them to-day, would not exist if Christian men and women fully recognized their duty as leaders in reform. There would be no political unrest if all our statesmen were Christians and all of them dominated by the spirit of Christ. Then legislation would be in the interest of the many, and not for the favored few.

Our habit of cutting life into fragments is a serious blunder. We speak of physical, mental, political, social, spiritual life as separate, distinct, unrelated and independent of each other; we speak of things secular and of things sacred, whereas these terms should express but different phases of life and its activities. "Life is one and religion belongs everywhere." The follower of Christ is to be the leader in all these activities mentioned. Not that he must be at the head of every movement; not that he must originate every plan that shall be beneficial to the world; but it is life that gives these things their real value. The Christian is the concrete expression of the life that vitalizes everything it touches, that purifies everything that is foul, that heals the putrid sores of the body politic, that rights the wrongs men are suffering everywhere. He has the life that shall dominate in all of life's activities. Whether he is active in politics, or in reform, or in civic matters, or in business, whatever the sphere in which he is most active, that should be his contribution to the forces that "make for righteousness."

Leading in Love

The Christian is not his own; he belongs to God. He is the ambassador of the King Eternal. He should represent him. In politics, in civic matters, in social affairs, in business, in philanthropy, in statesmanship, in the workshop, on the farm, in the counting-room, in diplomacy, in the marts of trade, everywhere and always, the ethics of the Gospel should be in complete control. Our citizenship is in heaven; our sphere of action is in the world. The terms of our citizenship are to be expressed in ways that should lead the world out of the intricate mazes of wrong into the straight highway of right. Of course, I do not believe that the church, as an organization, should enter politics, nor that she should array herself on the side of either capital or labor, except to commend or condemn these forces in accordance with their attitude towards the principles for which she stands.

An appeal is being widely circulated in Germany which says: "Many scientists, artists, journalists, bankers, are to-day supporting opinions which have nothing in common with Christianity. Free-thinkers, ethical culturists, supporters of a secularized school, Bruno Leagues, Culture Leagues, unions of liberal teachers, and numerous other groups are working for the destruction of the church, since it is as indissolubly bound with Christianity as a screw rusted into the nut." (Das Freie Wort.) "And this hate draws through the whole of modern life. It is publicly proclaimed in assembly and workshop and borne by a godless press in open or disguised form everywhere. Even in the church itself, in the form of radical liberalism, the foundations of Christianity are attacked and Biblical Christianity is pressed into a fight for life without parallel in world-history since the days of early Christianity. In view of the conflict between positive Christinnity and modern paganism in our national and church life, what is the crying need? There can be but one answer: Christians to the front!"

Are we to assume that Christianity is a failure, that the church will be overthrown, that sin is mightier than grace, that the king of this world is greater, more resourceful than the King Eternal? No! There is no cause for anxiety so far as Christianity or the church is concerned. These cannot

FOR EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR

BY REV. J. H. JOWETT, D.D.

SUNDAY, July 6. Matthew 2: 13-23. "The angel of the Lord appeareth to Joseph in a dream." The Lord can get at his people in many ways. He is not confined to one door; he can make such doors as please him. He can reach the consciousness by night or day, and lay the imprint of his will upon the soul. He can open the springs of impulse, and no one knows when the gracious well was digged. We awake some morning to find a new purpose in the mind, and a refreshed spirit of determination. It is the Lord who has "visited us in the night seasons," and bestowed upon us a silent gift of his grace.

And thus no one can be the judge of another man's experience. The word of the Lord came to the Philippian jailer through the ministry of an earthquake. It came to Lydia, in the same city, with all the silent softness of the dawn of day. The Lord speaks to one man through calamity; he speaks to another through a commonplace. He guides the mind of one by the speech of events; he talks to another in vision and dream.

No man must suspect his brother's communion with the Lord because it was expressed in unfamiliar ways. God speaks to man "in divers ways and in divers manners."

MONDAY, July 7. Exodus 2: 11-25. God prepares us for the greater crusades by more commonplace fidelities. Through the practice of common kindnesses God leads us to chivalrous tasks. Little courtesies feed nobler reverences. No man can despise smaller duties and do the larger duties well. Our strength is sapped by small disobediences. Our discourtesies to one another impair our worship of God.

And thus the only way to live is by filling every moment with fidelity. We are ready for anything when we have been faithful in everything. "Because thou hast been faithful in that which is least!" That is the order in moral and spiritual progress, and that is the road by which we climb to the seats of the mighty. We cannot prepare to be good missionaries by scamping our present work. When every stone in life is "well and truly laid" we are sure of a solid, holy temple in which the Lord will delight to dwell. The quality of our greatness depends upon what we do with "that which is least."

TUESDAY, July 8. Matthew 16: 21-28. "Whosoever will lose his life for my sake shall find it." The Lord permits no hoarding. If we lock up our strength in selfish indolence it will be invaded by mysterious moth and rust, and subtle thieves will break through and steal. A joy that is selfishly enjoyed dies out like a lamp deprived of oil. A blessing that is not shared withers away like grass which has no rain. Things are always fertilized when they are shared. They begin to propagate in the fine atmosphere of communion. God's holy dew and rain and sunshine fall upon human fellowships, while the selfish and exclusive life becomes dry and barren as a blasted heath.

Strange and gracious discoveries are made in the fraternal and sacrificial life. We go about distributing comforts and we find comfort. We take heart's-ease to our neighbors and we return to find the gift of peace. We go down the roads of life lighting lamps of happiness for our neighbors, and lo! on our return blessedness is shining in our own chamber. We scatter flowers of good-will and beneficence, and lo! Eden blooms in our own garden. We come to our own life through the welfare of our fellows; by lighting their streets we find our way home.

Many hearts are poor because they never give anything away. God cannot pour anything in because they pour nothing out. Every time we graciously minister to our brother we make room for the grace of God.

WEDNESDAY, July 9. Luke 1: 68-80. "Thou shalt go before the face of the Lord to prepare his ways." What a beautiful ministry, to be a preparer of the ways of the Lord! To go before him and to arrange for his coming! To go to guest-houses along the road and to provide him with chambers of rest! To make all preliminary provision, to do all that mortal can for the entertainment of the Lord of glory!

I saw a workingman shake hands with another who had fallen into beasthood and shame. He spake to him in courtesy, and hopeful goodwill, and made him feel the love of a fellow man. He was preparing the way of the Lord! I saw a city councilor seeking the removal of a social iniquity. He was working to let in the sunshine and the sweet air into reeking slums. He was "preparing the way of the Lord." I saw a teacher opening out the beauties of a flower to a little child, and unfolding the wonders of a country lane. She was "preparing the way of the Lord."

We are all forerunners of the Lord whenever we are laboring in any way in the services of truth and beauty. The king will come along our road in grace and glory! But let it be also remembered that we can hinder the way of the Lord. We can make crookedness and difficulty, and we can fill the road with stones. This we do by petty passions, by small resentments, by peevish self-seeking, by all bitterness and ugly self-will.

THURSDAY, July 10. Acts 7: 22-29. "It came into his heart to visit his brethren, the children of Israel." So that is how this great emancipation was born. A thought quietly arose in a man's mind, and it was to mean the rising of a people. "It came into his heart": that was the beginning of the Exodus. Vast movements often begin as silently as steps in silken slippers. There is no sound of drum, no call of trumpet! No rustle as of angel's wing! A ray of counsel falls upon a receptive mind, and its light is the birthday of a race.

So is it needful that we dwell in "the secret place of the Most High" that we apprehend these silent intimations of his will. If we dwell in the outer courts of the temple we shall miss the mystic guidance that is born beside the cherubim. If we abide in the passages of the external senses, amid transient sensations, we shall miss the heavenly messengers that visit the room of the heart. "The kingdom of God is within you," and we must seek the decrees of the King in that inner sanctuary.

"It came into his heart!" Whenever anything enriching and enlarging comes into the heart let us give it its true name. It is the Lord, and if only some thin veil were to be removed we should see him face to face. Let us "love his appearing," and in humble obeisance say, "Thy will be done."

FRIDAY, July 11. II Timothy 3: 10-17. "From a child thou hast known the holy Scriptures." And so Timothy was being prepared even though he did not recognize the preparation. Perhaps he found it burdensome: in later life the burden was to carry him! What in the earlier day may have been a dreary task turns out to be a lamp, which throws its welcome beams upon a dreary road. Yes, the piece of drudgery turned out to be Aladdin's lamp!

Timothy's mother, Eunice, little knew that she was preparing a great apostle of the Lord when she taught him the holy Scriptures. She "builded better than she knew." We can never measure the scope of faithful service. A teacher may have in his class a boy who is to unravel complicated social problems, or lead mighty crusades against hoary wrongs. It is a wonderful privilege to be permitted to give the first heavenly direction to lives that are destined for mighty issues. But there, in the mind of God, every life is appointed unto glory: and so for every life we may be heaven's fellow laborers in preparing the ministers of grace.

Let me, therefore, pay reverence to all childhood. It is very holy ground: the Lord is moving about making momentous preparations; and I must prepare with him. The mother, Eunice, and the grandmother, Lois, were fellow workers of the eternal God.

SATURDAY, July 12. Hebrews 11: 23-27. "He endured as seeing Him who is invisible." By faith Moses saw him everywhere. The invisible Presence was in every company, a Companion along every road. Everything was seen against his holy and eternal background. Every circumstance was set in the light of his countenance.

This is the faith which transforms the desert into a garden of Eden. When two lovers walk down the dingiest road it is as though it were adorned with the blood-red roses of paradise. The gray day has its own mystic sunshine. The lovers carry the magic air which suffuses everything with loveliness. And when the invisible Lover is with me on the road I can gather grapes of thorns, and in the grimiest circumstances I can see the gleaming tokens of grace.

And this, too, is the faith which makes the impossible a radiant hope. Tasks seem overwhelming until I measure them against God. Battles appear forlorn hopes until I see the Lord upon the field. The moral commandments daunt me until the Commander himself is seen on my side. His presence alters the face of everything. They say that when Napoleon rode on to the field it was like the entry of an additional host. Where my Lord appears "my dawning is begun." Roads are seen over every mountain: and a way is found over unbridged streams.

These Daily Meditations will appear in each issue through 1913

THE MOUNT OF VICTORY

ACROSS the yellow sands of Allah's realm,
Where Himalayan Mountains break the plain,
There stands, somewhat apart from lowlier peaks,
A mountain, called the Mount of Victory.
And all about the base there lies a wall,
And at the foot, and toward the setting sun,
A portal stands—a magic, mystic gate—
Which only those may enter through who win,
In many battles fierce, with monsters dire
That haunt the plain and passes near the mount.
But many youths and men there were who sought—
With purpose evil, or with goodly one—
To gain the sacred Mount of Victory.
So one—a prince from far-off land—had come,
And stood at last before the 'wildering door;
And as a traveler on the desert waste
Beholds the green oasis near at hand,
Nor scarce is sure it will not flit away
Like those mirages he beheld so oft,
So Nahad stood before the mighty gate,
But feared to touch it, lest it fade from view.
And while he paused he gazed upon the plain
And saw the snares of evil overcome.
And thus he mused: " 'Tis but a meet reward
Of all my prowess, that I gain this mount!"
Then he, on turning, fain had entered in
To share the glories he had long desired.
But lo! the massive portal yielded not,
Though madly, fiercely did he strive therewith!
Then, as a tiger, faint in time of drought,
Through forests journeys to a distant spring
And finds there only parched and sparkling sands—
Then as that beast, in mad and brutish rage,
Roars, howls, and paws the earth for wrath and grief,
So Nahad cried aloud and tore his hair,
While on the plain the conquered monsters hissed
In scorn, that one so valiant and so strong
Was ruled by such wild passions as the prince.
Then came a being, veiled, but tall and proud.
And Nahad, blind with rage, drew forth his sword.
The vision likewise did. And then befell
A conflict like the strife of fiend with fiend.
And, though the prince had fought with monsters dire,
None was so fierce and terrible as this;
But finally the sword of Nahad pierced
Right through the breast of him who fought to live;
And as he fell, the veil of his disguise
Faded, and Nahad saw a face—his own!
And—as reflected in a glass—his form!
But while he gazed, the vision fled away.
Then Nahad paled, but straightway flushed for joy
That conquered was the worst of monsters—Self!
And waking then, as from a trance, he saw
He stood upon the Mount of Victory.

FEEDING A HUGE CAMP-MEETING

PREACHERS and religious workers whose duties embrace the conduct of camp meetings or other similar open-air gatherings have recently been making pilgrimages in considerable numbers from all parts of the country to Takoma, Maryland. The magnet which has drawn these churchmen—leaders in their respective communities, who must, perforce, be of a practical as well as spiritual turn of mind—has been found in the opportunity to observe the routine of what is frequently referred to as the world's greatest camp meeting.

Once every four years representatives of the Seventh-day Adventist denomination assemble at Takoma Park in a world conference which continues in session for a month or more. Adventists come from all quarters of the globe and "camp out" in a model tented city during the conference. It is not alone the programs given in the huge assembly tent that attract. Many of the visitors are deeply interested in the ways and means of caring for the material needs of those in attendance. The Adventist officials have not only been willing to disclose their methods, but have afforded every facility to persons, whether of their own denomination or not, who have journeyed to Takoma Park to get "pointers" on this subject.

It is safe to say that no camp meeting in the length and breadth of the land presents harder problems in connection with cooking and serving food than does the conference in Maryland, which has come to be regarded as a national object-lesson. For one thing, there is the circumstance that the scene of the conference is in a somewhat isolated locality, and there being few, if any, regular eating-places in the neighborhood capable of caring for strangers, it becomes necessary to provide meals for virtually all those in attendance at the conference. As many of the delegates camp on the grounds, the responsibility is not merely for a mid-day meal, but for three meals every twenty-four hours. Finally, the fact that hospitality must extend not over days, but weeks, precludes the possibility of those makeshifts, suggestive of the basket-picnic idea, which are resorted to in the case of many a brief camp meeting.

The officials of the International Conference of Adventists, as the result of experience, have gradually reduced to a fine science the task of feeding the multitude. A large dining-tent is maintained at a central location in the conference grounds, and connected with this are kitchens which, in point of system and equipment, are worthy to rank with those in the average large city hotel. During the conference of 1913 there were served in this dining tent an aggregate of upward of 100,000 meals. On occasion 4,000 to 5,000 persons had to be cared for, and repeatedly the dining-room force demonstrated its ability to serve 2,500 people within an interval of from one hour to an hour and a half. The dining-room and kitchen staff totaled 125 persons and the salary list was approximately $600 per week.

Persons who made a study of the culinary department at the gathering at Takoma soon found the secret of its success. It was system, always system with rigid economy of time and space. The kitchens, as has been explained, directly adjoined the dining-tent; but in order to minimize the effect of inclement weather, the kitchens were installed in rough wooden buildings rather than in tents. Ranges and ovens of the latest approved pattern were provided, but these were not as numerous as they would have had to be but for the fact that the Adventists serve exclusively vegetarian menus. There were machines, all operated by electricity, which did the work of dozens of persons in preparing the vegetables, and there was even an individual butter cutter which turned out with almost incredible rapidity the individual squares of butter served to each diner. Potatoes were pared by friction—the skins being removed without a suggestion of tearing, pounding or bruising—and dish-washing machines, likewise operated by electricity, cleansed thousands of dishes after every meal with very little breakage.

IN THE CAMP KITCHEN

From the kitchens food was transferred direct to the steam tables, ranged in double tier in the center of the dining-tent. This was one of the most ingenious features. In such temporary quarters it was, of course, impracticable to have steam tables such as are utilized to keep food hot in restaurants and hotels; but tables were constructed with racks into which pans would fit snugly, and beneath these were placed burners, such as are to be found in the ordinary gasoline stove, with the result that the heat was easily regulated and all food was kept piping hot for the late comers. Most of the serving in the dining-tent was done by young women and they were so well trained that the serving of each course in a meal proceeded like clockwork.

The menus for all meals were posted in advance on large bulletin boards outside the dining-tent and persons who did not choose to patronize the dining-room were free to go to a lunch counter, which was operated in connection with the dining-room and under the same canvas roof. Or, if preferred, a visitor could be even more independent by making such purchases as he might desire at a full-fledged grocery and provision store which was conducted in this same connection. This store not only furnished the supplies needed for the dining establishment, but all manner of eatables, and especially package goods, were retailed over the counter.

SERVING FOOD FROM THE STEAM TABLES IN THE DINING TENT

Visitors were most favorably impressed by the excellent sanitary conditions in the camp, despite the great quantities of food handled daily and the rapidity with which many of the operations connected with cooking and serving had to be conducted. It was found impracticable to screen the huge tent; yet, thanks to traps and preventives, flies were at a minimum. The manager even resorted to the expedient of erecting a screened shed, in which all garbage from the kitchens was deposited until it could be burned or permanently disposed of. Another marked improvement over old-time conditions was the provision in the dining-tent and electric lights.

DISTRIBUTING THE FLOOD FUND

REPORTS OF THE USE OF PARTS OF THE RELIEF FUND IN MARIETTA, OHIO, AND POINT PLEASANT, W. VA.

THE various local committees to whom was intrusted the distribution of the apportionments of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Western Relief Fund are rapidly completing their work and placing their reports in the hands of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD'S auditing department. The first two of these reports are given below with the names of the beneficiaries omitted, in accordance with the permanent policy of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD of shielding those in temporary need, to whom its charities may be extended, from all publicity. The business management and editorial force of this paper wishes to take this early opportunity of tendering its sincerest thanks on behalf of the contributors to the flood fund to those who have so ably co-operated in this distribution.

MARIETTA, OHIO, June 12, 1913.

Editor Christian Herald, New York, N. Y.:

SIR: During the early part of April, a representative of your paper, Mr. Edward R. Johnstone, visited this city in behalf of the Flood Relief Fund created by you, and after reviewing carefully the great loss and distress caused by the flood in this vicinity, asked the mayor of the city to appoint a committee of three, including himself, to take charge of that part of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD fund assigned to Marietta. The committee appointed was Mayor C. F. Leeper; Chas. A. Ward, postmaster, and Rev. Chas. C. Elson, of the First Methodist Episcopal Church.

Mr. Johnstone authorized the committee to draw upon THE HERALD for $1,000, which was later increased to $2,500.

We take great pleasure in enclosing herewith a detailed report of our expenditures, together with receipts covering the entire amount. You will note that we gave partial relief to 89 cases, amounting in all to $2,498.15, while the expense of disbursing same was $1.85.

Each case is numbered consecutively to correspond with the receipts. If you should care to publish the report in detail we would ask that you use the numbers only and not the names, for obvious reasons.

You will note that we sent $125 to Beverly and $100 to Lowell, villages near here, to be disbursed by their relief committees.

The loss from the flood in this little city of 14,000 was in the neighborhood of $1,500,000, and the loss came the heaviest on the poorer class of people, hundreds of whom lost their all. Through the agency of the Red Cross, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and numerous other relief agencies, the worst of this distress was relieved temporarily, and most of the families given a small start towards ultimate recovery. Many of them, particularly the older people, will never get back to the same place they occupied before the flood, while hundreds of them are in a measure starting life anew.

In each case relieved by your committee we made a personal visit to the premises, satisfied ourselves of the situation and found out what other relief had been given them. We went on the theory that small amounts spread over a large number of cases would be better than to give larger amounts to a few cases.

The relief funds here are now practically exhausted, although there are still a number of cases where a little help would be of great benefit.

In conclusion we wish to thank THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and its subscribers on behalf of the city of Marietta for its timely and valuable assistance in the darkest days our little city has ever experienced.

Respectfully,

Committee. { CHARLES F. LEEPER, CHAS. A. WARD, CHAS. C. ELSON.

The detailed report of the Marietta committee, together with that from the Point Pleasant organization, will be found on page 632.

AMERICA'S FLYLESS TOWN

REDLANDS, California, is not a big place, but it has recently attained wide fame as the only "flyless" town in the United States. A worth-while distinction for any place, big or mall, when we remember the millions and millions f disease-breeding flies turned loose every summer o plague man and beast. About a year ago the fly uestion was reached in Redlands. It was high time. The weather was hot and the town seemed to swarm vith these insects. The mayor of that city recently emarked: "That 'swat the flies' advice is all wrong. There is absolutely nothing to it. We don't do it in our town and we have made Redlands the most unhealthy burg in the land for a fly to try to live in."

"Well, what do you do to get rid of the flies?" the nayor was asked.

HOW THE FLY-CATCHER SNARES THE PESTS

"Go out in the streets of our town and see for yourself and hunt up Chapman, our official fly-catcher. He is the only one in the world, I think, and he has made good. Hear what he has to say about flies," was the reply.

This advice was taken. At the first street corner was noticed a curious object which proved, on close inspection, to be a screened frame, twelve inches square and over two feet high, about the size of a big square waste-basket. It was a fly "cage." The bottom sat about two inches from the ground. In this bottom was a cone-shaped screen with the large opening down. Under this was placed a banana peel or other fly delicacy. Investigation demonstrated that the pests go under the screen and, the light being above, fly up into the cone and thence through the small hole into the cage. Naturally it would take a rather smart fly to find that little hole again and get out. Flies instinctively fly up and towards the light. So that cage, with no effort whatever, catches flies by the thousands.

It is so complete that the duties of the municipal fly-catcher consist simply in daily baiting the traps, collecting the flies and burning them. According to the report he filed at the end of his first month in office, September, 1912, he killed 3,750,000 flies. He had emptied fifty gallons of flies from 100 traps scattered through the business portion of Redlands and he estimated that there were 75,000 flies to a gallon. At this rate of destruction it is no wonder Redlands soon became a flyless town.

At present, over five hundred fly traps are distributed over the little city. They are to be seen in every place—in front of the municipal building, the post office, the railroad stations, many of the big shops and along the highways, but recently the daily task of the official fly-catcher has been light.

It was in July a year ago that Mr. Chapman built his first "fly-catcher" and began experimenting. He found that if the trap could be shaded so that the light would show higher through the cone more flies would enter the cone. He also found that the traps on the shady side of the street would always catch more flies than those on the sunny side.

It was quickly discovered, in conversing with Redlands' fly-catcher, that he has made a deep study of the psychology of flies. He knows how, when and where they breed, how much damage they do and how necessary it is to the health of any community to get rid of the pests.

"Every one knows," he said, "the real danger of the housefly. It has been spread broadcast until there is scarcely an intelligent community but contains people who know how the fly can carry all sorts of foul disease germs; how typhoid, tuberculosis and many other dread diseases—even infantile paralysis—can be spread by the flies.

"It probably seems to almost every householder that winter kills off all the flies; even a month of cold weather seems sufficient for this; but if you will investigate in the early spring you will be amazed to find many flies about your home. Look in your cellar and you will doubtless find these flies patiently dozing away around the hot-air pipes, in corners of the ceiling, in the rafters and crevices around the kindling piles, behind barrels and boxes stored away, and in many such places.

"In the early April days, or, in the South, as early as the first of March, the female fly that so cleverly tucked herself away in some warm nook of your house will begin to awake from her long sleep, flutter her wings, shiver a few shivers and then fare forth to multiply.

"This female fly has from 120 to 200 eggs which she wants to deposit, and which she will deposit. If there is no stable at hand she will deposit those eggs in the garbage pan, or even in the earth of your rubber plant or ferns or palms. She will find some place to deposit these eggs—any place where there is exposed organic material.

"Now, if the weather is fairly warm, every female fly that was hatched from the 200 eggs deposited by our first fly (the one that passed through the winter sleeping) will begin to deposit eggs at the end of ten days.

"The little fly that first deposited eggs the first of April will have been responsible for descendants by the first of next September that will amount to ten raised to the thirteenth power, or more than one hundred thousand million! If one fly can do this, what can a houseful of flies do?

"The remedy is to begin in the early spring and fight the flies. Search your house as though you were looking for a two-carat diamond you knew was there, hunt up every fly in every cranny and crevice and kill it. When the warm weather comes keep up the fight with screens and traps and above all with searching out the breeding-places and destroying them.

SIDEWALK FLY-TRAPS IN REDLANDS

"Working on the basis that the best way was not to swat, so generally advocated, but to capture in large quantities, I devised the fly-catcher. How successful they have been only Redlands knows. They have kept the dwellings, and even the meat markets, grocery stores and fruit shops almost entirely free of flies, and each day thousands and thousands of the pests are caught in the traps.

"The most important thing in the use of the fly trap is the bait. Bread and milk is the best and it should be frequently renewed. It should always be fresh and never allowed to dry up, for it then loses its attractiveness. The best way to kill the trapped flies is to immerse the top portion of the trap in boiling water; then destroy the dead flies by burning, destroying all the germs that are on them."

RECENT SUFFRAGE VICTORIES

FOR several weeks there had been a number of black men marching through the halls, asking the legislature for an appropriation to assist them in celebrating the semi-centennial of their emancipation. At the same time a number of white women had been walking the same halls seeking from the legislature assistance, not for the semi-centennial of their emancipation, but for their deliverance from political bondage."

These words were spoken by Governor Dunne of Illinois at a banquet held in Springfield on June 13, celebrating the great victory for the cause of woman suffrage won on June 11, when the Illinois House of Representatives passed, by a vote of 83 to 58, the McGill Woman Suffrage Bill, which had passed the State Senate early in May. Continuing his address, Governor Dunne said: "Eight years ago, when I was mayor of Chicago, I found the school teachers of that city, six thousand women, one of the most potent forces on which I could depend. It was then that I became an advocate of woman suffrage. The women seeking suffrage knew they were right. While their sisters across the water were firing buildings, creating riots and injuring their cause, these women went about their task quietly and sensibly until they carried their cause to victory. I know their votes will have a good effect upon the purity of the institutions of the State."

Nearly one hundred women left Chicago to be present at this banquet, which was given by the members of the Illinois Equal Suffrage Association to members of the legislature and others who united in the jubilee. The four women who conducted the successful and innocent lobby at the legislature were Mrs. Grace Wilbur Trout, Mrs. Medell McCormick, Mrs. Elizabeth K. Booth and Mrs. Antoinette Funk. A big parade was organized at Chicago to meet these ladies and their companions when they returned, after their victorious siege at the legislature. Women all over the United States and Europe were jubilant over this latest victory for "the cause," a victory which is clearly the largest so far won in the United States. Illinois is the third largest State in the Union, and the largest State so far to adopt equal suffrage. Wyoming was the first State to grant the franchise to women, adopting the principle of equal suffrage in 1869. Colorado came next, in 1893; Idaho and Utah took the stand for votes for women in 1896; Washington in 1910. Four States surrendered to the demands of the fair sex last year, when California, Arizona, Kansas and Oregon passed equal suffrage bills. Montana and Michigan have partial woman suffrage, giving women who pay taxes the right to vote on questions submitted to taxpayers. In Louisiana women taxpayers may vote in person or by proxy on questions of taxation.

At about the same time this State victory for woman suffrage was gained, the Federal movement won another count in the contest, when the committee on woman suffrage made a favorable report to Congress on the constitutional amendment granting the ballot to women, which had been introduced by Senator Chamberlain of Oregon.

On the same days that the Woman Suffrage bill passed the Illinois Legislature, the Storthing of Norway unanimously agreed to extend the principle of female suffrage already in force in that country so that all women will have the right to vote in parliamentary elections without regard to the amount of their income tax. The provision now in force grants the franchise to women in the cities w o pay a tax on an income of $100 and in rural districts to those paying a tax on an income of $75.

On June 15, the Woman Suffrage Congress opened in Budapest. The Minister of Education on behalf of the government, the burgomaster of Budapest, and Countess Iska Teleski, president of the Hungarian Organizing Committee, delivered addresses of welcome. Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt, of New York, the president of the Congress, in her presidential address reviewed the rapid growth of women's movement toward greater liberties. She declared that there are now but few countries which do not have an organized woman's movement. The movement in China was to be enrolled on the day after Mrs. Catt's address. She pointed out that during the past winter woman suffrage bills had been considered in seventeen parliaments and in thirty-three State and other legislatures.

The Rev. Anna Shaw preached at the Protestant Church in Budapest the morning before the conference opened. Some of the presbyters had objected to her occupying the pulpit and she spoke from the font at the entrance to the church. Simply to make this record complete and truthful, it must be stated that some recent public remarks of Mrs. Shaw concerning women who are opposed to receiving the suffrage were so vigorous that the organization of the anti-suffragists in America issued instructions to its workers to refuse in the future to enter into any public discussions with her.

Our Coming Celebration

ELSEWHERE in this issue we let out a secret. On October 24 next, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD will celebrate its thirty-fifth birthday. For a full generation, as they are now reckoned, it has been carrying into countless homes its message of cheer and entertainment and of the joy of Christian service. In all those years, the radius of our Family Circle has been steadily widening, adding new thousands every season until it has grown to be the greatest ever known of its kind. And what a mighty power for good in the world it has proved itself to be none knows better than our readers themselves, whose zeal for all good works has literally compassed the globe.

We invite each and every reader to join us in helping to make the coming anniversary of their favorite journal a memorable success. Our own preparatory work is already under way, and now we ask you to do your share. How you can cooperate most effectively is explained in pages 623 to 626 of the present number, which we cordially urge you to read. We are still keeping the Million Mark clearly in view, and here is a splendid opportunity to bring us closer to that shining goal than ever before. With your loyal help and a big, confident effort all along the line, we can reach it. Then the whole Family Circle would raise a pæan of exultation over the good news.

When you recall what wonderful things have been accomplished in the past with your co-operation—how THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has been a welcome messenger of helpfulness, consoling those in sorrow, lifting up the fallen and despairing, illuminating the dark places of the earth with the radiant Gospel, befriending the fatherless and the helpless, leading thousands of little ones into the light and training them for useful lives, relieving the distress of multitudes at home and abroad; when you remember how all through those years it has been a standard-bearer of divine truth and how it has stood like a bulwark of defense for the Protestant faith against its assailants—when you think of the many wonderful experiences in which you have had a share, you will confess, in your own secret heart, to a feeling of thankfulness that your personal cooperation and encouragement have helped to make such a record of service possible.

But we feel, after all, that the real work of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is only beginning, and that its best years of service for Christ and humanity are yet to come. Protestantism is to-day facing a great issue—the ever-increasing political power of Romanism in this republic. Churchless multitudes need the Gospel. There are urgent calls for Christian service from various quarters. We not only want you with us, but we want you to enlist recruits, that our army may be up to the million mark. Every one who reads this knows of others who would be benefited by joining our Family Circle—some friends or acquaintances, perhaps, for whom life could be invested with a higher purpose than now. We want you to bring them in. There's room enough and a welcome for all. Just think of the results that are possible if every member of our HERALD household brought in one new subscriber! But you may do even better than this. Try it. Read the four-page anniversary announcement, and begin your canvass forthwith, so that you may share with our whole Family Circle in the rejoicings when the anniversary day arrives.

Summer and Mont-Lawn

MONT-LAWN is rather a desolate place in winter. The cottages are closed and cold; the grass is dead; the trees are bare; "Fort Plenty" is bleak and cheerless; the river is locked with ice; the winds sweep over the gray hills and whistle through the deserted paradise of the children.

But summer brings a transformation more wonderful than fairy ever wrought. Windows are opened, and soft summer breezes float through brightened rooms; the grass is again a living velvet of green; thick green leaves dance and whisper in the wind; Fort Plenty offers its alluring welcome; the blue river smiles and glistens under the golden sun; the flag rolls sedately in the breeze—and children, children, children are everywhere.

Is this anything like our heart, one wonders? Some hearts are apt, at times, to grow chilly and bare, devoid of music and laughter and sunshine and fragrance—and the love of little children. Then when we let the children and the sunshine and the sweetness of charity in again, the soul is transformed, and the face beams, answering to the rejuvenated heart. And if it were not for the fact that every summer many hearts are tender and radiant with love and sympathy Mont-Lawn would be desolate in summer as well as in winter, desolate because devoid of the sweet child life for which it stands. Most of the hearts that keep Mont-Lawn flourishing never allow the winter of unconcern for others to settle down upon them. They live in the sweet summer land of charity all the year round. But there are many more who would be cheered and blessed beyond measure if they would come into this glad fellowship.

Summer—and Mont-Lawn. Who this year will join our former friends in bringing three thousand little waifs out of the stifling heat of the city to the health-giving joys and comforts of the country? The Home is ready for the children. Already the first battalion has come, making the green hills echo with their laughter and their songs. Will you help bring the others who need the refreshment and the cheer of the Children's Paradise? It is a work the great, divine Friend of children loves. He cared for children then, and blessed them. He cares for them still, and is saying: "Whoso shall receive one such little child in my name receiveth me."

The Folly of Strikes

OUR well-meaning neighbor, the Independent, commenting on the disturbed industrial situation—with its accompaniment of strikes and acts of violence and with all the suffering it entails upon the workers themselves, besides the discomfort to the public every time a strike begins—compassionately declares it a pity that such things should be. As a people, are we not educating at the top, while the bottom of the pile is neglected? We have arbitration treaties, commerce courts, interstate boards and a vast amount of legislative machinery for the regulation of "big business," yet we have thus far no organized system for dealing with labor disputes, which, left to run their own course, operate as a grievous infliction upon the whole community, and on no class do they bear so heavily as on the workers themselves. Every new strike sweeps away the savings of thousands. Defeat means to them absolute poverty for a time at least; and triumph, while satisfying a principle, usually has the same effect approximately. However we may view them, strikes cost all too dear for everybody concerned.

There should be a remedy, which would meet at least some of the needs of such a situation, and i must ultimately come through wise legislation Compulsory arbitration on the Australian plar would probably be held as too drastic, but othe means could be devised to bring the workers anc employers together voluntarily for the review of their differences before a properly constituted authority. Civil and criminal courts are not suited tc the requirements of the case. What is needed is a court of conciliation, advisory in its character, and which will not hew harshly to the line and letter of the law, but will be governed by the principles of equity and justice. If an industrial dispute were submitted to a Labor Court at the outset, and the case either heard at once or testimony taken by a commission on which both sides are equally represented—strikes being held in abeyance meanwhile—a fair basis would be laid, in a majority of cases, for a peaceful adjustment. Such a tribunal necessarily would give consideration to more than the purely legal aspect of the case; it should take a liberal view of the claims of justice and humanity and the good of the greater number. Its attitude would awaken the spirit of mutual conciliation; misunderstandings would be more quickly cleared up, and bitterness and antagonism would be allayed, leading to the avoidance of strikes and lockouts.

It is unfortunately true that labor leaders are not always the best advisers or protectors of labor. Our industrial system is cruelly crude and imperfect, and, taking advantage of this, some of these leaders become mere fomenters of discord. It is their profession and they live by it. Were affairs to move along peacefully and quarrels to be settled amicably, their occupation and their income would soon be gone. If labor courts were established to deal with all important industrial disputes at the outset, it would be a long step forward in the direction of industrial peace.

The Suffrage Amendment

IT WAS a day of crowning triumph for the advocates of woman suffrage when the State of Illinois decided to give them the right to vote. Eleven States are now in line for equal suffrage for both sexes, and the Senate Committee in Washington, four of whose nine members represent suffrage States, has reported favorably an amendment to the constitution, giving women the right to vote. This, coming closely on the heels of the Illinois event, is the most significant indication of ultimate victory thus far recorded. It is the hope of the women that the non-suffrage States will now fall into line. In several States, where there is a strong anti-suffrage organization, the campaign may be a prolonged one. But the admirable attitude of the women of America, especially in contrast with the situation in England, where violence seems to have set back the movement indefinitely, has won them respect and confidence.

The Latest Gospel "Find" Not New

IT IS perhaps unfortunate, yet seemingly inevitable, that the daily newspaper should be an extremely doubtful source of information in matters relating to theology. Recently a London despatch appeared in a number of daily journals, announcing as an important discovery the finding and publication of "The Book of the Resurrection," said to have been written by Bartholomew, one of the disciples, and now restored to the world after having long been lost. This "find," it was explained, was in the Coptic text and dated back to the tenth or eleventh century. Originally in the dialect of Upper Egypt, it had now been translated, edited and published. It is a mistake, however, to give the impression that the book is a "find" in any sense. Bartholomew's Resurrection has been well known to students of Biblical research ever since it was printed in Greek by Vassiliev from a Vienna manuscript of the thirteenth century. It is ranked among the purely apocryphal writings, and is one of the great mass of Manichæan productions belonging to the third century, which represented a system outside of the Christianity of that early day, and which industriously confused legend and tradition with the truths of sacred history.

—THE NEW YORK STATE COURT OF APPEALS has rendered a decision supporting the Cullan law, lately passed by the legislature, which makes the flight of an automobilist, after running down and injuring a person on the public highway, a crime. This will have the effect of checking an evil which has outraged public feeling on many occasions, when motor drivers have fled after an accident for which, in many cases, they might not have been criminally responsible.

Thirty-fifth Anniversary of The Christian Herald

A Personal Letter from the Editor

ear Friend:

On October 24th, 1878, the first mber of The Christian Herald was issued America. October 24th, 1913, will then the thirty-fifth birthday anniversary of the hristian Herald Family.

There are still in the Family today not a w members who read that first number of he Christian Herald, and who have re-ained steadfast members of our spiritual ousehold for over a third of a century. lany thousands of others have joined dur-g the intervening years, and have added eir zeal and enthusiasm to the purpose for hich this periodical was created.

The growth of the Christian Herald amily has always been from within. That to say, new members joined because of the irect efforts of the older members to make em do so. These efforts have been of two inds: first, where members persuaded their iends to subscribe; second, where the mem-ers, recognizing the great good The Christian Herald would do some friend or acquaint-nce, have taken an extra subscription and ad it sent to the person they wished to help. his is a form of home missionary work that as had the most fruitful results. For instance, ead the following letter, which we received ome time ago from a man who became a eliever through reading The Christian Herald:

> I have been receiving The Christian Herald about five years. It was subscribed for me through the kindness of a dear old grandmother, who, thinking I might go astray in this game of life, thought your paper would be a guide for me, I suppose. Not being used to such reading or literature, I did not take to it for quite a while; but I always did like truth, and The Christian Herald seemed to be full of it, and I must honestly say it just seemed to plead for me to lead a clean life. It has taught me to seek higher ideals, and makes me believe more and more that we have great power in God, if we will only give in and live up to his great laws, which give us strength to be of use to God and our fellow-man.
> A READER OF YOUR PAPER.
> Sacramento, Calif.

This letter is only one of hundreds we have on file — letters of thankfulness from souls which have been won through the efforts of the Christian Herald Family.

Now, the anniversary of the Christian Herald Family presents a wonderful opportunity to bring thousands more into the fold. By permission of the U. S. Post Office Department, we are enabled to make one of the biggest offers ever made by this paper. We are actually enabled to offer The Christian Herald for six months for 35 cents. Think of it! a chance is given to you to have The Christian Herald sent for a half-year into some home where its influence is not now felt.

If a friend will not go to church, you can have the church come to him by sending him The Christian Herald. He will not be able to escape its influence a single week for a whole half year. Have you a son who is making his way in the city, or a daughter, perhaps, who is married and gone away to a home of her own? Make a list of these friends and relatives and get them to subscribe, or if they will not, send The Christian Herald to them anyway and see if the result will not be as in the letter we have quoted.

Never was there a time when opportunity to do good was as great as now, because, during this anniversary year, we are going to publish special features of a highly spiritual nature. During anniversary week we shall issue a special Anniversary Number, the biggest ever published by The Christian Herald, which will contain a complete illustrated history of the paper and what it has accomplished under divine blessing. And in that number will be begun a wonderful continued feature which we believe will exert a greater power in bringing the attention of the world to the saving grace of Jesus Christ than anything yet published in any periodical. Your friends will simply not be able to resist it.

We are sure you will want to help us in carrying on this work. We count upon your help and we know you will give it.

Yours in the Gospel service,

Geo. H. Sandison

EDITOR.

WONDERFUL PR…M

One-Half Year Subscription

Celebrating Our Anniversary

THIS is positively the biggest offer THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has ever made its readers. Think of being able to send such an evangelizing force into thousands of homes where it has never before been felt and at such small personal cost! Is it not your duty to embrace such an opportunity? Can you think of any other as great, or any to be had at such small personal sacrifice? If you could cause a single friend to attend church for half a year would you not go out of your way to do it? Of course you would.

Never in the history of the CHRISTIAN HERALD Family was there a chance to accomplish so much. It is the anniversary year of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and we mean to celebrate the event by giving our readers a better, more intensely interesting, and more highly spiritual paper than ever.

Special Features

During anniversary week we shall publish a special anniversary number, the biggest ever issued by this publication. Therein will be begun the first instalment of a series which, as Dr. Sandison says, "will exert a greater power in bringing the attention of the world to the saving grace of Jesus Christ than anything yet published in a periodical."

So you may have the satisfaction of knowing that if you cause a friend or acquaintance to read THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for the next six months he or she will simply be impelled to remain a permanent member of the Family.

How to Use Coupons

Distribute the coupons among such of your Church and Sunday School friends as will be likely to subscribe. Tell them that each coupon saves 40 cents on this half year subscription. Explain to them the beauties, the riches, the great attractiveness of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and urge them to give it a trial. Or, you may prefer to make a list of your friends at a distance, and make them a present of a half-yearly subscription to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD (sending us the coupons with the names and addresses of your friends accompanied by 35 cents each), thereby causing them to feel its influence and to thank you for it every week for one half year.

Read Coupons Carefully

Each Coupon attached hereto will be accepted in lieu of 40 Cents, if accompanied by 35 Cents for a HALF-YEARLY Subscription to The Christian Herald.

But no subscription induced through this offer will be permitted to take the place of one now on our books. Each subscription must be NEW.

FOR EXTRA COUPONS

We could print only six coupons in this issue of The Christian Herald, but you can have extra coupons, all you can use, by simply dropping us a post card asking for them.

CONDUCTED BY
FERDINAND C. IGLEHART D. D.

Off for the World S. S. Convention

BLUE skies and every propitious circumstance that could mark the beginning of a journey conspired for the happiness of the hundreds of Sunday school delegates who led on June 14 from Boston on their way to rich, Switzerland. Even before the liner Canopic cked away from her pier it was known that practally every State in the Union and almost every otestant denomination known on the American ntinent was represented by the delegates on ard. A huge crowd gathered at the pier to watch steamer away and send their warmest wishes the success of this, the world's greatest confere on the problems of childhood. This is the era young life. Childhood is the center of attraction a large section of the activities of our age. The bies are the sovereigns now. What care they uld have, what they ought to eat, what ingrents in food will harm and what will do the most od, how they can have purer air and better enronment are subjects of daily argument and entific consideration. This modern attention to e imperious demands of babyhood and childhood s actually increased the physal longevity twenty-five per nt. in this country in an inedibly short time. There is ecial care for the intellectual lture of children in the superb stem of public schools, the just ide of the nation, and the spel schools provided. It is the ildren's era in the religious orld. The origin of the Sunay school was a part of the vine appointment. It has been hrist's right arm among the ations in saving the world in odern times. In our own untry ninety per cent. of all ho join the Protestant churches. o so through the doorway of e Sunday school, showing hat an elementally evangelical gency it is, and how much ore important it is to form han reform character, important though that be. Hence a orld gathering in behalf of unday schools is of deepest sigificance. There are some daners that the Sunday school aders of to-day should avoid. he greatest of these is the hint r broader statement of doubt s to the authority of the Scriptural text in the printed lesson elps. It is a shame, and a tronger term could be used, to oison the very fountain of noral and religious life with unelief. The rank heresy that is oured into some of the Sunday chools of the country is a nockery. By the time the children have gotten it into their minds that Moses is not a historian but a mythologist, that the miraculous statements of the prophets and sacred writers are not what they claim to be, by the time there is a hint of doubt about the bodily resurrection of Christ as expressly stated in the text, that sin is not the most fatal malady and crime in the universe as the Book says it is, the child has gotten a long way to agnosticism and atheism, instead of being trained up for an honored place and loyal service in the Christian Church. Christ is the all of the Sunday school as he is the all of the church, and it should be of first importance for the teachers to inspire in the children faith in the text that tells of him, in order that they may take him as a crucified Redeemer and as their personal Saviour. This thought is contained in the command of Christ to Peter:

He saith unto him, Feed my lambs. (John 21: 15.)

SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTION DELEGATES BOUND FOR ZURICH, WAVING GOOD-BY FROM THE "CANOPIC"

Childless Couple Commit Suicide

EUGENE MAGGI and his wife, believed to be the richest people in Switzerland, committed suicide a short time ago. Maggi was forty-one years old and his wife thirty-five. They both inherited and added to large estates. It is estimated that they were jointly worth several million dollars. They had been married a number of years and no children had been given to them, and in deep disappointment from that fact they lost interest in life. They retired to a chamber in their beautiful villa and were found dead the next morning with the gas turned on. What a tragedy! It was natural they should have been disappointed in being childless, and yet they ought to have been philosophical enough to have taken the appointments of life as they came with a good grace, as many others have done whose homes have had no children. How lovely it would have been if they could have remembered that there were so many children in the world fatherless or motherless, or worse than orphans, and could have adopted through a mammoth system of beneficence, which was within their means, thousands of little ones and supported and educated and prepared them for the duties of life. This would have occupied their time and filled their lives with happiness, and the world with their influence and their fame. During their lifetime and through all the ages they could have cared for thousands of orphans every year. What a pity that they should have lost their grip on life and thrown away the immortal possibilities of usefulness in this world by turning their material wealth into a divine providence of motherhood and fatherhood to those whom circumstances have deprived of their parents. Such conduct would have answered this apostolic description of true religion:

Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this, To visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted from the world. (James 1: 27.)

Boy Saved His Brother

WILLIAM ZIMMERMAN, of Nyack, passing a deep pond in that village the other day, heard cries for help. He discovered a youth struggling in the water. He ran down the bank, dived into the water and swam out to the drowning lad, who, as he came up almost within reach of him, sank for the last time. Zimmerman followed him down and pulled him up, and to his astonishment and delight he found that the one rescued was his little brother Alfred. The little fellow, who could not swim, had been floating around on a large log and had tumbled off. There was mutual rejoicing joined in by a number of spectators on the bank when the big brother swam with Alfred to the shore. We may not realize the fact, but every thought of affection, every act of love in behalf of a fellow mortal, every physical, moral or spiritual rescue that is made is as though the service were rendered to a blood relation. The poor wretched man, however broken and marred, is our brother, and the woman, however degraded and cast out by society, is our sister, and the rescue of such is the salvation of a brother or a sister. The rescue of Alfred by his elder brother suggests to us our salvation from sin by our Elder Brother, which beautiful thought finds expression in these words:

Wherefore in all things it behooved him to be made like unto his brethren, that he might be a merciful and faithful high priest in things pertaining to God, to make reconciliation for the sins of the people. (Heb. 2: 17.)

Duty to the Orient

PRESIDENT W. H. P. FAUNCE, in a baccalaureate address to the graduating class of Brown University, outlined the needs of the Orient which this country must supply. President Faunce has recently returned from a trip around the world. He said among other things: "Engineers are needed to build the railways of the East, bankers to devise monetary systems, doctors to deal with the plague of blindness in Egypt, the horrors of leprosy in China and pollutions of soul and body consecrated by religion in India. But the greatest need of the Eastern world is still to be named—the spirit of disinterested service to humanity. No material improvements will meet the Oriental needs. No economics or sanitation, no judicial reforms or building of railways will do it. Nothing but the vision of God in Christ, a vision which came to us from the Orient, can uplift and reshape the Oriental lands to-day." As Europe and America received their civilization and Christianity from the missionaries who came out from Asia with the message of Christ's Gospel, so Europe and America have recognized the obligation of sending Christ back again to Asia and to the people of the Far East. This duty is expressed in the answer of the apostle to the call:

And a vision appeared to Paul in the night: there stood a man of Macedonia, and prayed him, saying, Come over into Macedonia and help us. (Acts 16: 9.)

$43,500 in Gems Stolen

BELOW the "dead line" that demarks the financial district in New York City and where a crook of any kind is supposed to be arrested on sight, $43,500 worth of diamonds was stolen a short time ago from the desk of a diamond broker in Maiden Lane, in the most mysterious manner. I. R. Theise had, according to his custom, taken the brown satchel containing the jewels from the safety deposit vault to his office. Before going to a wash-room adjoining his office, he locked the jewels up in his desk, and then closed two doors with spring locks behind him. Returning in three minutes he found the doors ajar, the desk open, and his fortune in diamonds gone. Alarm was given, but as yet no clue to the thieves has been found. Among other gems in the satchel taken were 300 unset diamonds. The wife's private jewelry, a valuable collection usually in the deposit vault, happened to be in the bag stolen. The proprietor in accounting for the theft said: "I believe that the man who got my jewels was behind the partition door when I entered the office, and the fact of my going to the wash-room saved me from being murdered." We have here a striking illustration of the insecurity of earthly treasures, and the folly of setting our hearts upon them, as thus expressed by the Saviour:

Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth, where moth and rust doth corrupt, and where thieves break through and steal; but lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through nor steal. (Matt. 6: 19, 20.)

Questions and Answers

Reader. What was the cause of division between the Methodist Episcopal Church and the Methodist Episcopal Church, South?

The differences of opinion between the North and South during the years preceding the Civil War caused the disruption. There is a very strong feeling in both denominations now that since these differences have so long been settled the two bodies should reunite. At the General Conferences of both the M. E. Church and the M. E. Church, South, last year the sentiment for union was very strong. Some years ago a promising step was taken in the adoption of the same hymn book by both communions.

S. L. D., Paducah, Ky. All Baptists claim that the apostolic church was essentially Baptist and that infant baptism is an innovation which came later. Orchard asserts that the first three centuries were Baptist. About the middle of the third century the Novatian Baptists established separate societies which continued until the end of the sixth century, being followed by the Paterines, who continued till the Reformation. These views, of course, are not shared by the historians of non-Baptist denominations, who hold that Baptism dates from about 1520 and that infant baptism was practiced from the beginning of Christianity.

E. D., Gannett, Idaho. I would like to know what the meaning of Matt. 1 really is. It says: "The generation of Jesus Christ, the son of David, the son of Abraham." In the sixteenth verse it explains that it is the generation of Joseph, the husband of Mary. What shall we say to the infidel who pointed this out to us?

The "book of the generation" is a purely Jewish expression. A genealogical table was carefully kept in every Jewish household, according to ancient law and custom. The genealogy in Matt. 1 is that of Joseph only, not of Mary, but even here it is proclaimed that Joseph was not the natural but only the legal father of our Lord. Matthew's genealogy traces the descent of the legal father from David, thus giving assurance that even on legal grounds the royal lineage of Jesus could not be questioned (see verse 16). Contrast this genealogy with that of Mary, found in Luke (who wrote more immediately for Gentiles, while Matthew wrote for Jews). Both genealogies trace the descent of Jesus, through his legal father and his actual mother, from David, the line upon which all the Jewish hopes of the Messiah centered.

J. H. McG., St. Marys, Can. 1. Such reasoning as you suggest with regard to the creation of man would involve an endless circle of questioning, since everything finite must have had a beginning. 2. See recent paragraph in THE MAIL-BAG concerning the "sons of God" (progeny of Seth, the righteous) and "daughters of men" (progeny of Cain). 3. According to tradition, Mary the mother of the Saviour lived many years after the crucifixion, and may have been alive at the time of the incident you mention. Besides, the early church had nothing in common with Roman Catholic teachings regarding saints, etc.

Reader, Marshfield, Wis. 1. Was it ever right for a man to have more than one wife? 2. If so, why is it wrong now, or how did it become wrong? 3. Are the moral and spiritual laws the same for women and men? 4. If so, why is a woman always blamed more than a man for wrong-doing?

1. Jesus, in speaking of certain provisions of the Mosaic law on the marriage question, said: "From the beginning it was not so." Matt. 19: 8. He referred to the original creation of one man and one woman as fixing the moral law that a man should have but one wife. The fact that Abraham and the other patriarchs had more than one wife does not make polygamy right any more than the fact that they owned slaves makes slavery right. The Bible is a truthful record of the lives of the people of whom it tells. They did many things that were wrong; God dealt gently and patiently with his people, leading them by a long process of teaching and development toward the full understanding of his perfect will. 2. There was no particular time at which polygamy became wrong, but it was the teaching of Jesus, more than any other influence, that showed mankind that it is wrong. In the New Testament the love of husband and wife is presented as the highest form of love; it is inconceivable that any outsider, or third person, can enter into this sacred fellowship. Polygamy means injustice to women; the plural wives are outsiders, deprived, from the Christian point of view, of real wifehood. 3. The moral and spiritual laws for men and women are undoubtedly and incontrovertibly the same. 4. A woman should not be blamed for wrong-doing more than a man, except that Christian civilization and the old ideals of chivalry have taught the race to feel that a woman's spiritual and moral instincts are finer and purer than those of men, and thus there is a greater shock and horror when she does wrong.

H. H. B., Ashland, Calif. 1. The passage in Jer. 31: 22 should be translated, more accurately, "encompass." Commentators, in the main, interpret it as meaning that Israel, though feeble as a woman, would yet arise with new strength and become superior to the warlike Chaldeans—that the captives would subdue their captors. It was as though Jeremiah had written that when wayward Israel returned to her spiritual allegiance, the Lord would bless his people with such happy conditions that even a woman might act as protector. Some of the early church writers, however, held it to be a Messianic allusion. 2. Don't know where the poem can be found.

THE IMPERATOR, BIGGEST OF LINERS, NEARING HER PIER IN NEW YORK

THE new Hamburg-American liner Imperator, the largest ship afloat, reached New York on June 19 on her first trans-Atlantic voyage. She made the trip from Cherbourg in six days, five hours and twelve minutes, carrying 350 first-class, 400 second-class, 1,000 third-class and 1,700 steerage passengers. The new ship measures 919 feet in length, 98 feet beam, and has a tonnage of 50,000. The bridge is 90 feet above the water-line and her masts measure 246 feet from keel to truck. The giant liner is like a great floating hotel, with elevators and rooms en suite, with private baths. She has restaurants and regular dining saloons, huge open music rooms, library, drawing-rooms and smoking room, and a wonderful Roman bath with a splendid swimming pool.

Old Subscriber, Wilton, Wis. No enforced celibacy was known in the church until long after the apostolic age. Chrysostom opposed it, Polycarp, Eusebius, Cyprian, and other early writers mention priestly marriage as a common thing, and in fact, during the first three centuries there is no evidence of celibacy as a rule of clerical life. The Council of Trent (1545-1563) established the rule of celibacy. It is uncertain at what date the confessional was established, but it was doubtless much earlier. Indulgences seem to have been unknown in the early church, and probably date from about the third century A.D.

Subscriber, Peru, Ind. Kindly name the authors of all the books of the Bible.

Genesis, Exodus, Leviticus, Numbers, Deuteronomy—Moses [scholarly opinions differ here, but so far no thoroughly convincing arguments have been advanced to disprove the Mosaic authorship of large portions of these books]; Joshua—Joshua [also ascribed to Phinehas, Eleazar, Samuel and Jeremiah]; Judges—ascribed by Jewish tradition to Samuel; Ruth—unknown; I and II Samuel—unknown [probably the work of Samuel, Nathan and others]; I and II Kings—unknown; I and II Chronicles—probably Ezra; Ezra—probably Ezra; Nehemiah—Nehemiah; Esther—probably Mordecai, or Ezra; Job—uncertain [has been attributed to Moses, or Job]; the Psalms—David, Moses, and others; Proverbs—Solomon and others; Ecclesiastes—formerly ascribed to Solomon, now thought by many to belong to a later period; Song of Solomon—Solomon; Isaiah—Isaiah; Jeremiah—Jeremiah; Lamentations—Jeremiah; the remaining books of the Old Testament were written by the prophets whose names they bear, with the probable exception of Jonah; Matthew—Matthew; Mark—Mark; Luke—Luke; John—John; Acts—Luke; Romans to Philemon—Paul; Hebrews—unknown [has been ascribed to Paul, Luke, Apollos, Barnabas]; James—James; I and II Peter—Peter; I, II and III John—John; Revelation—John.

J. S., London, Canada. 1. Babylon was taken by Cyrus B.C. 538; its walls were thrown down during an insurrection, under Darius Hystaspes, B.C. 500; its temples were plundered and destroyed by Xerxes some years later, but it was still a royal abode in the time of Seleucus Nicator, after which it began to decline rapidly, finally becoming a mass of ruins. In 4 A.D. its site was used as a park or hunting ground for the Persian monarchs. 2. The reference to Babylon in I Peter 5: 13 is to that portion of the dispersion (the church of Christianized Jews with Gentile converts) residing in Babylon, which was the center from which the Asiatic dispersion was derived, and the headquarters of many of those whom Peter had addressed at Pentecost (see Acts 2: 9).

J. M. O., Council Bluffs, Iowa. 1. Speaking generally, the Irish people as a whole are Roman Catholics. 2. In 1690-91, James II and his French auxiliaries were supported by the Catholics, and King William III and his Dutch and English forces by the Protestants of Ulster, who were in large part of Scotch Presbyterian descent, their fathers having been sent to Ireland as colonists by James VI of Scotland upon his ascent to the English throne as James I. 3. The relative percentage of Roman Catholics and Protestants in Ireland to-day may be roughly estimated as about 80 and 20 respectively.

Mrs. A. G., Lincoln, Mo. 1. The passage in Rom. 6: 23 is one which contains the very marrow, the "fine gold," of the Gospel. As the laborer is worthy of his hire and feels it to be his due, so is death the due of sin, the wages the sinner earns and works for. But "eternal life" is in no sense or degree the wages of our righteousness, for we can never earn it by any effort of our own. It is, in the absolute sense, the free gift of God, who bestows it of his divine grace, making Christ the channel through which it comes. Death and life are before all who hear the Gospel, the one the natural issue and reward of sin, the other the gracious prize which God of his own free will bestows upon the repentant and believing sinner who comes pleading the righteousness of Christ as Saviour, who has paid all the [illegible] and through whom alone we become acce[illegible] 2. PASTOR SHELDON AND CIVIC REFORM

TOPEKA has been enjoying the novel experience of having a preacher as chairman of the Civil Service Commission of the city. The last election of mayor and commissioners put into office the best set of who have ever presided over the city. Rev. Charles eldon, D.D., during the campaign made a speech at a meeting, at which he suggested certain things which he ht should be done e police. The successful candidate for r, R. L. Cofran, who been mayor twenty before, asked Dr. on to put his ideas practice. Dr. Sheldon accepted the position. Of the other two ers on the commission one is a principal in ublic schools. As were no rules for police, Dr. Sheldon up a set, using the to police regulations as a basis. One of new requirements is prohibition against ing while on duty. rules are now in .

PASTOR SHELDON AND HIS CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION

In addition to this, it was decided to have policewomen. Two have already been employed and are on duty, one having taken part with the chief of police in a raid on a disorderly joint. Dr. Sheldon also drew up rules for the policewomen. The former chief of police resigned immediately after the election, and Colonel J. W. F. Hughes was appointed. He is rigidly enforcing the law. Judge Huron is giving the maximum fine to all offenders. As a result, a great many of the undesirable class have already left town. F. M. Stahl, the warrior of the Kansas State Temperance Union, says that the condition is "the best to-day in the history of the city."

Dr. Sheldon accepted the task of assisting in the reorganization of Topeka's police system with the understanding that the appointment should be temporary. As he will be away from Topeka most of the time for the next two years, he handed in his resignation a few weeks ago.

verthrown. The gates of hell not prevail against them. God his church and in every movefor the betterment of the world. ough these agencies he will not to accomplish his purposes. But Christian must lead. The battle is world-wide; we are in possession nlimited spiritual forces and will ly win the day.

follow Christ is to love the d. I have followed the logical se and named the most important ciple last; but in its practical application to the affairs of the kingdom second. Love is the prime requite in leading the world. It is impible to lead it without loving it. second great command is: "Love neighbor as thyself." Love, in e form, is the master motive of y advance movement. It may be of adventure, or of conquest, or of e and glory. It may be that of exation, of discovery, or the love of try. It may be manifested in anthropy, in invention, in the ch after truth, or in the mere acition of gold. Other elements r these quests, but love is the chief pelling force. It is not the of man to man that lifts the world rer the divine ideal; it is not in an affection to woo the world away n itself; it cannot do the work that equired. It is the love of God operg through these human channels t will accomplish what God had posed from the beginning, viz., the salvation of the world. It is a fact of revelation that love is both the foundation and capstone of the Kingdom of God. It is both the law and the life of that kingdom. It is the key to all mysteries and it unlocks the doors of God's treasure-house, flooding the soul with the riches of his grace. It is the love of God that constrains men to live and toil, to suffer hunger and cold, to die, if need be, only so that the kingdom may come. The experiences of Paul, as he relates them in II Cor. 11: 23-30, have been the experiences of God's chosen ones in every age, and with him they have also exclaimed: "None of these things move me."

But love does not only concern itself with great world movements, upsetting age-long customs, changing the habits and laws and government of the peoples. It does these things, but it does them as the individual is changed. The individual, the man, the unit, is the key to the world-problem. Man in himself is a kingdom. And that kingdom to its remotest bounds is to be under the reign of love and should govern him in all his relations with other men.

One reason why the world has not yet been won for God is because those who are to lead the world and to love the world have not allowed him to fill them with his love, so that they could love all men, their enemies as well as their friends. To love an enemy is a difficult task—none more difficult—yet none so imperative and necessary. It is a difficult thing to love one who hates us. There are few things that so severely test us as to kiss the hand that smites, to pray for one who persecutes, to bless the one who curses us. But God loved the world enough to give his only Son to redeem it. After all, perhaps the reason why it is so hard to love an enemy is because we have come to regard love as an emotion, as a sentiment or an impulse, when it is the highest attribute of God and should be the highest characteristic of the Christian. Many are simply religious sentimentalists. "They revel in the poetry of feeling," and that is all. Beecher said: "Love in the moral world is what heat is in the natural world." Blot out the sun and everything that has life dies. Destroy love and the same result follows in the moral world. Love is the one thing that shall abide. Prophecies shall fail, knowledge shall vanish away, tongues shall cease, faith and hope shall pass, but love abideth forever. If the world is ever to be won for God, it will be won only as the Christian loves it. The love of God was manifested to a lost world by the gift of his Son, and the love of Christ is to be manifested to the world by those whom he has redeemed. To follow Christ, then, is to leave the world, to lead the world, to love the world, but the greatest of these is love.

A new kind of pastry

Crisco pie crust is rich, wholesome and delicious. It is more wholesome than a crust made with lard, for Crisco is all vegetable and all pure.

Crisco's digestibility is especially important in relation to pie crust, in which so much shortening is used; it is a scientific fact that shortening is unchanged in the baking process. It is still in a raw state, merely having been distributed throughout the dough or crust.

CRISCO
For Frying - For Shortening
For Cake Making

PLAIN PASTRY

1⅔ cupfuls flour
1 teaspoonful salt
⅔ cupful Crisco
4 tablespoonfuls cold water

Sift the flour and salt and cut the Crisco into the flour with two knives until it is finely divided. Then add the water sparingly, mixing it with a knife through the dry materials. Form into a dough, roll out about ¼ inch thick, on a floured board. Use a light motion in handling the rolling-pin, and roll from the center outward. The Crisco should be of a consistency such that when scooped out with a spoon it rounds up egg-shaped.

KNIGHT-ERRANTRY IN BIBLE TIMES*

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON BY DR. AND MRS. WILBUR F. CRAFTS

BY THE lesson story of to-day we see that knighthood was in flower thirty-five hundred years ago. When Moses came to the defense of his fellow countryman who was being beaten by an Egyptian in an unwarrantable way, he was a true knight; also, when he tried to part the two Hebrews who were striving with each other. Transcending either of these occasions, and quite idyllic in character, was the occasion when he came to the relief of the seven shepherdesses, who, when they had laboriously drawn water by handbuckets from the well, and had filled the troughs that their sheep might drink, were driven back that the sheep of the shepherds might drink. Then Moses coming upon the scene stood up and helped the shepherdesses and watered their flocks. Not having to draw water twice as on other days, they returned to their home earlier than usual, and when their father asked an explanation of them, they told him that an "Egyptian" had defended them. Moses was to all appearances an Egyptian because he had dwelt in the king's palace for nearly forty years, thirty-seven to be exact, and was known everywhere as "the son of Pharaoh's daughter." Added to the force and charm of his knight-errantry was his exceeding culture, for "Moses was learned in all the wisdom of the Egyptians, and was mighty in words and in deeds."

And Reuel, the father of the shepherdesses, a prince and also a priest in Midian, said to his daughters: "Where is he? Why is it that ye have left the man? Call him that he may eat bread." That was extending hospitality according to the Oriental way of establishing a friendship never to be broken. The shepherdesses sought Moses, and, finding him, gave their father's invitation. And Moses came, and dwelt in the family of Reuel. Even so long ago the brave deserved the fair, for Reuel gave Zipporah his daughter to Moses to be his wife, and she bore two sons to Moses, Gershom and Eliezer. There are three accounts given of this interesting story in the Bible, and they should all be read now. (See Ex. 2: 11-25; Acts 7: 17-29 and Heb. 11: 23-27.) The exchange of a palace home in Egypt for the rural home in Midian was certainly to the liking of Moses, because he continued to dwell there forty years.

This was a part of God's great plan to make Moses the leader of his chosen people. God was schooling him first in the palace of Pharaoh to be a learned lawgiver, and second as a sojourner in desert (country) places he was being prepared to guide his people in their journeying to the Promised Land. The crisis came after this manner: "And it came to pass in the course of those many days that the king of Egypt died; and the children of Israel sighed by reason of the bondage, . . . and their cry came up unto God, . . . and God remembered his covenant with Abraham, . . . and God took knowledge of them." Ex. 2: 23-25.) And Moses was fully prepared to carry out God's purposes for his people.

Read the stories of Isaac and Rebekah, Jacob and Rachel to learn that Moses was not the first knight. (Gen. 24 and 25.) Certainly Moses was not the last Old Testament knight. Joshua was a defender of the oppressed; the education of children was a part of his economics. (Josh. 4: 19-24.) Samuel at the close of his long career was able to say to the great congregation: "Whom have I defrauded? Whom have I oppressed?" And there was none to challenge him. David withstood Saul as a brave knight that Saul might realize his folly and mend his ways. (I Sam. 24.) Again, David showed his knightly qualities when he provided in a royal manner for the lame son of Jonathan. (II Sam. 9.) It would be quite worth our while to search the Scriptures on a campaign for discovering knights.

Now we will consider the knights of more recent times. When the departure of the Roman legions from Britain, as Tennyson tells us, left men to do about as they pleased in the absence of any adequate government, the roads were filled with robbery, and everywhere outside of walled towns men generally adopted the robbers' simple plan "That they should take who have the power and they should keep who can." Therefore King Arthur gathered men of noble instincts about his round table, and made them knights to go forth not to conquer territory or markets or win spoils, but to redress wrongs, to defend the weak, especially womanhood, in the spirit of the cross. They were "knights without fear and without reproach," who took King Arthur's oath as expressed by Tennyson:

> To ride abroad redressing human wrongs,
> To speak no slander, no, nor listen to it;
> To honor his own word as if his God's.

As years went on boys were trained for knighthood. This began when they were seven or eight years of age. Their first course was when they gave seven or eight years of constant attendance and waiting upon a master and mistress. They were taught religion and morals and love by the chaplain. They were taught to walk as soldiers, and to ride as brave hunters. They were accustomed to military exercises and athletic sports. They voluntarily suffered heat and cold, hunger and thirst, fatigue and sleeplessness in order that they might become hardened. When between fifteen and sixteen years of age the "pages" became "squires," and in the ordinary course of a chivalrous education "knighthood" was reached in early manhood. There is much in the Boy Scout movement of to-day that reminds us of the training for knighthood. The solemn promise made by a boy scout at his initiation is "I will be a friend to every living creature, man or beast, and a brother to every other scout, fortunate or unfortunate, rich or poor. I will be courteous to all."

Are knighthood and meekness incompatible? In the Golden Text for this lesson we read: "The meek shall inherit the earth." In Num. 12: 3 we read: "Now the man Moses was very meek, above all the men which were upon the face of the earth." But how could Moses be both meek and possessed with knightly courage? We must not confuse meekness with weakness. "Meek," in the Bible sense, is the equivalent of "gentle" in "gentleman." It is not cringing, it is courtesy and dignity combined. It is not necessarily a passive virtue; on the contrary it may be active, as in the case of Moses when he defended the shepherdesses; but it is always self-controlled. It is not like water flying off the wheel, but rather like gliding water, keeping within its limits. Meekness is strength. King David said: "Thy right hand hath holden me up, and thy gentleness hath made me great" (according to the margin: "With thy meekness thou hast multiplied me"). And Jesus said: "The meek shall inherit the earth"—they shall be great. Jesus himself, when he dwelt among men, showed that gentleness is the highest type of manliness. The word "meekness" as used in the Bible is the same Greek word that is used in Xenophon's Anabasis for the training of horses, and the Scripture idea of a meek man is a tamed man. Then one need not be discouraged if he strives to acquire meekness even if he has a fiery temper.

It is well for us to consider what are the chief adversaries of meekness. Here they are in array: irritability which comes from untrained or overspent nerves. It is always easier to "let ourselves go" than to hold ourselves in check; when we come to this point it is well to go aside by ourselves to think and to pray.

Pride is another adversary. We would sometimes be quite willing to overlook a thrust or a slight, but we have too high an opinion of ourselves not to take notice, and so we fight it out, and often find ourselves humiliated in the end.

Conscience is an adversary of meekness—a misguided conscience. It has been said: "Conscience lends its name and its clothes to every passion in turn to masquerade withal." The same writer has said: "A glorious thing is an educated and intelligent conscience, moving within the sphere of love and long suffering, and not going outside of its glorious rainbow lines. But a conscience that is allied to all the underman is the world's torment. Conscience has persecuted the world, turmoiled the world." A regenerated conscience will make way for meekness.

OUR SUNDAY SCHOOL SUPERINTENDENTS' ROUND TABLE

—WE HAVE BEEN asked to give some hints about what to do with the Sunday school in the summer. This we will do from two points of view—the city Sunday school and the country Sunday school. Generally speaking the city Sunday school is at its lowest ebb during the summer for two reasons: many of the teachers and scholars leave the city for vacation trips and those who remain either spend much time on Sunday in the parks or in short excursions to the country.

The first thing to be done is to make an attractive summer program. Saturday excursions should be planned to get flowers with which to decorate the Sunday school room. A committee of teachers and scholars should be appointed to have this matter in charge. If flowers are not obtainable, let branches of leaves be used—anything to make the room compare in beauty with the outside world. Inside dreariness and dirtiness will only disgust young people with the Sunday school. Have the Sunday school room renovated during the summer so that the stay-at-homes will get the benefit of its first freshness.

Provide a good musical program, twice as long as usual, with the addition of a flute or violin or even a harp. What if it does cost something to do it? Those who cannot have vacations are entitled to something extra at home. Let the superintendent exert himself to make his talks to the school more interesting. He would do well to use a stereopticon at least once in two weeks. Occasionally, let some expert speaker be engaged to address the school. Introduce the "surprises" suggested a few weeks ago in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Let no teacher be guilty of leaving the city without making provision for a substitute teacher. Nothing reacts so painfully upon scholars as to have no teacher. Let the superintendent of the city Sunday school determine that the summer session shall have the best features of the whole year, and he will be saved from the hard work of building up the school as a part of his autumn work.

As to the country Sunday schools: they should make up a list of city visitors in their region and discover who among them are Sunday school workers, and those persons should be invited to give some assistance during the summer. It would be well to have two or more monthly institutes arranged in which the city talent could be used. These might take the form of "bush meetings," and if held on a week day, a fine country lunch might be served. Some country Sunday schools hold out-of-door services during the summer, excepting when it rains. The Northfield plan of sending wagons around to gather up the scholars, each farmer taking his own wagon, is an excellent scheme for getting together that might be copied everywhere.

The suggestions herein made for both city and country schools can be adapted to towns and villages according to circumstances.

One point to be guarded against everywhere is the excursion, either on week days or Sundays. The children in the city should be instructed and guarded against the contamination of the Sunday excursions. And as for country Sunday schools, there should be counter-attractions of the proper kind arranged for them when they are in regions where Sunday excursions from the city occur.

LOVE OF COUNTRY

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER, JR.

ANG! Crash! Boom!" The fire-crackers, and the torpedoes, and the rockets join together in a wild and discordant tumult, to the delight of the small boys, o the horror of the grown-ups. ed fires vie with the waves that somehow s seem to help cele-the glorious Fourth. e midst of the noise he laughter and the ant excitement we t all too often the ing of the day that lebrate.

ne one has said, in a of eloquence, that to love of God comes of country. And al-h there are scoffers aliens in our land, it nderful to notice the ence that is shown, as heads are l while the band plays the "Star-gled Banner," or when the flag rried by.

nce saw two dirty little boys ling by the gutter selling papers. of them was wearing, very self-iously, a large and rapidly ing black eye. As I waited for ar I happened to catch a tiny bit is conversation:

lory, Jimmy," said one little boy fle enviously, "how did yez git de eye?"

ay, kid," answered the other, "yez see de other feller! He had both mine, and one tooth out, too!" and he went on to explain: "Y' see, I on to de movies, and as soon as I dere dey started playing de Span-Banner t'ing, and so I got up like rest. But one kid—" his voice red contemptuously, "he sat still to me. An' I yelled at him, 'Hey, e, get up.' But he said, 'not h!' So I said: 'Git up or I'll lick and he said: 'I'm bigger'n you!' beat him up good!'" did not approve of the methods, yet when I heard the tiny citizen his story, I could have applauded. if the little untaught children of streets, children whose fathers and hers were foreign born, can love honor the flag of their adoption, do not have to worry about the fu-e of our home land.

here are so many stories of patri-m that could be told, and so many ies that have been told over and r again, ever since the day just one dred and thirty years ago, when a pany of the scholars and states-n of America gathered together to te a wonderful paper that has, in th, been the foundation of our free-n. Men and women have done brave ds, and have suffered and died for country that belongs to them, but friends-of-mine, do we remember m as we watch our fireworks, and ute our flag?

t is impossible to count the ways being patriotic, of loving one's ntry. Ways that seem pitifully all and unsubstantial to the person o is looking for big things. And it the little things that count. e girls and boys who help a tired ther, or lend a hand to some strug-ng soul; who give up some great easure for the sake of another, are e present-day patriots.

I once knew a Civil War veteran who ed to tell the most fascinating ries that a small imaginative child er listened to. He told of battles, charges, of attacks by night, and bugles that as darkness fell played ps softly over new-made graves. nd I listened big-eyed with excite-ent or with frank tears as a tribute heroism. Once in a burst of en-usiasm I asked him why I too uld not be a soldier when I grew up, it he told me that little girls had to ay at home. At which I cried and fused to be comforted. Then he told e this story.

Margaret E. Sangster, Jr.

"Once upon a time there was a girl who wanted to be a soldier when she grew up. She wanted to wear a shiny sword and sit on a prancing charger, and ride off to the wars. She dreamed of it all her little girl life while she was helping her mother wash dishes, and take care of the baby, and darn stockings. Then one day a war did break out, a great war that swept through the country and took her brothers away to the front to be killed. The girl found that she could not leave home, for her mother needed her. So she felt in her heart that she was a failure, that she could never be a patriot and show how much she loved her country.

"The war went on fiercely, as wars do, and very few tidings came to the girl's home. But sometimes a soldier, tired and worn from the struggle, would stop at the door, for he knew that he would not go away empty-handed, and often a hungry troop would struggle past on their way to the front, and she would feed them. One day two men came bearing between them a stretcher, on which lay a man who seemed to be dying. The girl with loving care nursed him back to health again. But at last, as she was sitting by his side, tidings came to her that the war was over. And she looked at the man while tears welled up into her sweet eyes.

"'Sir,' she said, 'the war is over and I have not helped. I have done nothing to show how much I love my country.'

"But the man reached over and drew her hand to his lips.

"'Maiden,' he said, 'you have done much. You have fed the hungry and put new heart into the weary ones. You have given of your little store to the penniless, and last of all, maiden, you have saved my life; and I am the king!'"

I was very young then, but the story took deep root in my mind, and whenever I read in poem, and legend, and ballad about the daring deeds of Joan of Arc and other warlike maidens, I think of the little girl who stayed at home to help her mother, and who saved her king.

Girls, every day there is a chance to be patriotic, to show your love of country. Fourth of July, with its blaze of glory, and Decoration Day, with its flowers and wreaths, are only two days out of a whole year. Do not try to concentrate all of your patriotism into just forty-eight hours a year. Try not to fret because you must sit at home and do the homely little tasks that have to be done while others grapple with the world and do the showy deeds that win public applause. For some day a king may pass by the others and come to your door.

Patriotism and love of country are not merely shown by courage and bravery on the battlefield. It is the heroine that can do the everyday things of life with a smile, even though her heart is breaking and her eyes brimming with unshed tears, that shows her love of country, her patriotism and her faith in God.

When the wars are waged and the soldiers die
For the flag that they hold most dear.
When the rockets shoot to the darkened sky
And the people applaud and cheer,
When the death drums roll o'er a fresh-laid mound
And the ivy twines on the sod,
Then be brave to try, while you live—or die,
To honor your land—and God!

"You go and see where the fire is, Jimmy. I'll stay with your ma."

And Jimmy was out on the sidewalk and halfway down the block before the stolid neighbor had reached the kitchen door. The premises and his mother were safe. He could not even stop to ask permission to go or to announce his departure. There was nothing to do but go—and he had gone.

It really was an ugly fire. The minute Jimmy saw Jackson's grocery store he knew there was no possible chance of saving that particular building. He was something of an expert on fires. He had for years been a close observer of them and of the methods of fire-fighting. Indeed, he had, only last spring, been the leading spirit in forming a boys' auxiliary fire company, but his efforts had been frowned upon by the two fire companies of the village and by the village authorities. Boys were in the way at fires. Fire-fighting was a man's job. There was not the slightest encouragement given to Jimmy's brigade and, having no opportunities to demonstrate its usefulness, the organization had fallen apart. One thing, however, had been accomplished. A defective fire hose, condemned by one of the men's companies, had been, through the good offices of a big brother who belonged, made over to the boys. It was now in Bill Peter's woodshed, Jimmy knew, on a cart which the boys themselves had built.

But before he started to run for it Jimmy studied the present fire more carefully and critically. It was a combination almost as bad as his Fourth of July distresses. Just north of Jackson's grocery store was an old rookery, formerly a tenement house, now too dilapidated even for storage purposes, but still intact because the owner had not made up his mind what to do with the lot on which it stood, and was awaiting developments. Next to the old tenement was the first of the newer and better stores of Main Street, then residences stretching down the shaded road toward the schoolhouse. There was a brisk south wind, growing brisker every moment, and the flames were having a most delightful time in Jackson's grocery, and were already reaching out greedily toward the tenement.

A score of men and very small boys were standing helplessly about and a few were making frantic efforts to do something. There was really nothing to do. One graver head, sensing the serious danger which really threatened half the town, telephoned to Springdale, summoning the firemen to return, and hinting that some of the other companies had better be invited to come along.

By this time Jimmy was scurrying wildly down Main Street to Maple Avenue, making a dash, not for Bill Peter's woodshed, but for Abel Swift's barn. Abel's son Morton shared a secret with Jimmy Rouse. Some dynamite had actually been secured from the stone-crusher, and nobody but these two knew where it was. Jimmy dived into the barn, ripped up a loose board from the floor, took out a small box, and tearing off the cover and pawing over some cotton packing, drew out three dynamite sticks, duly capped and ready for business.

He raced back to the fire. The deputy policeman was on duty, and Jimmy, to give the transaction a semblance of order, handed the cartridges dutifully to him.

"You'd better dynamite that tenement," he said in a matter-of-fact way. "While you're doing that I'll go and get some hose, and we can douse Smith's store. Only don't wait. That building's got to come down quick or one hose won't do Smith's place any good."

A crowd of men gathered round the bewildered constable and helped him follow Jimmy's directions.

"If you want to come with me, Mr. Savage, I'll show you where there is a roll of hose we can make fast to this hydrant. We can get it here quicker together than I could alone."

Mr. Savage, who had been a leader of the safe-and-sane idea and did not even care to go to Springdale, found himself following Jimmy to Bill Peter's woodshed. They trundled the hose down the street, Mr. Savage puffing in somewhat undignified fashion, and were greeted with cheers as they came in sight. Everybody had forgotten the boy company's hose.

The tenement had fallen, but the grotesque piles of its ancient timbers made an excellent conductor for the flames from Jackson's store to Smith's. But Jimmy's hose came into the game, and the flames did not have the easy time they had anticipated. The breeze was stronger than ever. There was a good pressure in the water mains, particularly good because it was a holiday and the big subscribers to the village water were not using their ordinary daily supply. The flames licked the south side of Smith's store, but Jimmy's hose, held by Mr. Savage and himself—for it was his hose, and not even the constable could have driven him away from it—contested every square inch of the south wall and the shingle roof. The extra heavy water pressure counteracted the defects of the hose itself. Jimmy directed Mr. Savage to help him turn the stream now and then directly on the fire, keeping all the while a close watch on conditions at Smith's. The water ohn C. Proctor came to Peoria in h young manhood with no other capit than a clear brain and a clean h rt. He never married. Through a ong life he prospered in a business y and when he died some six years a it was found he had virtually given b k to the public the wealth which a g wing population and the increasing i lustry of the region had helped him t accumulate. Practically his entire f tune of about $3,000,000 was left in the form of a trust fund, out of the income of which certain public charities are to be created and maintained. Two of these benevolences, the Proctor Hospital and the John C. Proctor Endowment Home for Elderly People, have been in operation for some time. The Proctor Field House and Recreation Center is in process of completion and will be opened to the public in September. There are public playgrounds in the country with a larger area of ground for out-of-door sports, but for the amount invested the Peoria Recreation Center is already conceded to excel all others. Indeed, the building itself, when in operation, will be surpassed by none in the country. The playground covers some four acres of ground, exclusive of the land used for building purposes. This will, of course, be utilized for all manner of field sports. The entire plant, excepting the outdoor swimming pool, will be open the year round. It will be maintained free of expense to the city.

Having seen these splendid benevolences by which Mr. Proctor perpetuated his memory one thinks of St. Paul's words to Timothy, "Charge them that are rich in this present world . . . that they do good, that they be rich in good works, that they be willing to distribute." O. E. C.

uld not make much direct impresn, for the tenement made a magficent bonfire. But the flames could ake no headway at all at Smith's. ney found nothing there but deluge. Gradually the tenement material as consumed, and Jimmy and his iend turned their attention to subing the flames there. Then the noke began—glorious, thick smoke. nd Jimmy's heart danced with joy. ere was a Fourth of July worth hav g. He was fighting against the noke instead of making it. It was real battle—but a battle against anger, not a battle to create danger. ut the smell of the smoke! And the ullen glare of the defeated flames! nd the feel of the heavy hose in his ands! And the delicious mud and rime and smudge and water with hich he was covered!

The fire was out. The town was aved. Then Jimmy thought of the otatoes he had not peeled.

"I'll have to sneak home," he said o Mr. Savage. "I'll come back after linner and wind up the hose. We can et somebody to keep the water turned n the ashes here a couple of hours. Might's well telephone the boys to go n with their parade. I guess there ain't no more danger."

Jimmy forgot grammar rules occaionally in moments of stress.

But it was too late. The firemen ad almost reached the village, and hey came on. And when it became known what Jimmy had done they commanded him to go back with them for the parade at Springdale, which would be delayed about two hours and half on account of the Brandon fire.

"I've got to stay with my mother," said Jimmy stoutly. "She's sick."

"No, you haven't," insisted Dr. Ainslie, one of the companies' chiefs. "I'll send a nurse around to stay with her, and I'll send my cook, too, to get her dinner. And you'll ride back to Springdale with us on the engine and ride in the parade. That's where you belong to-day. We'll be a little late for the spread over there, but we'll get in on it before they have everything eaten up."

It was really a fine parade at Springdale. But in all the magnificent procession, a procession of fire companies and militia companies and a cavalry troop, with bands, drum corps, floats, engines, hose-carts, hook-and-ladder trucks, and emergency wagons, there was only one item that actually awakened thunderous applause—an item that not only thrilled with delight the crowd of spectators on sidewalk and lawn and porch and window-seat, but curiously gripped the throats of many and caused a sudden moisture in eyes here and there. That item was a very muddy and bedraggled boy, perched up between the knees of the driver of Columbia Engine No. 1 of Brandon. For a hastily painted canvas sign, draping the engine, told the story, of whose details all the citizens of Springdale and its crowds of visitors were by this time aware:

"Jimmy Rouse, chief of Hiawatha Fire Brigade, Brandon. He put out the big Brandon fire to-day—and saved the town."

The Howard Watch

THE World's Record for speed on the water is held by a motor boat—45.22 miles an hour. A measured mile in less than one minute and twenty seconds: Howard time.

Forget for a moment that speedboat racing is a sport. Consider its practical results. At any given price, compare the motor boat of today with that of a few years back.

In every American industry, you will trace all its progress to hard-headed efforts to beat the record for efficient use of time.

When you see a concern forging ahead of competition, stamping its individuality on the trade—there you find the HOWARD type of man putting the thing across.

The HOWARD Watch owner may be the titular head of the concern, the Superintendent or Department Manager. It is just as likely to be some inspired youngster, who would probably disclaim any part in moulding the career of the business. As if he could help exerting the power he does!

A HOWARD Watch is always worth what you pay for it.

The price of each watch is fixed at the factory and a printed ticket attached—from the 17-jewel (double roller) in a Crescent Extra or Boss Extra gold-filled case at $40, to the 23-jewel at $150—and the EDWARD HOWARD model at $350.

Not every jeweler can sell you a HOWARD WATCH. Find the HOWARD jeweler in your town and talk to him. He is a good man to know. Admiral Sigsbee has written a little book, "The Log of the HOWARD Watch," giving the record of his own HOWARD in the U. S. Navy. You'll enjoy it. Drop us a post card, Dept. CHURCH AND STATE

FROM A LUTHERAN STANDPOINT

By Pastor D. H. Steffens

SOME years ago I happened to be one of a number of Lutheran clergymen who, while attending a church meeting in Washington, called at the White House to pay their respects to Mr. Theodore Roosevelt, who was at that time the chief executive of this nation. As is customary on such occasions, a spokesman made a short address introducing the party, to which the President responded. At the close of his address the clergyman who acted as spokesman chanced to say that the Lutheran Church of this country stands unequivocally for the full and complete separation of church and state. Mr. Roosevelt, in his reply, immediately seized upon this point and dismissed it with a brief reference to the first article and amendments to the constitution, remarking, "As I said to the gentleman who called upon me yesterday: 'This country stands for impartial justice to all of its citizens regardless of any difference of race, creed or color.'" I afterwards learned that the gentleman who had called upon him the day before was the papal delegate, Satolli. This gave the whole incident a peculiar significance. I could not but wish that I knew in what connection President Theodore Roosevelt said to a representative of the Church of Rome the self-same thing that he, on the following day, said to a little group of Lutheran ministers.

"This country stands for impartial justice to all of its citizens regardless of race, creed or color." But does it? In theory, yes. In practice, no. We have not yet consistently carried out to its logical consequences this principle, according to which the state has to do with its citizens purely as citizens, and consequently with a church merely as an association of citizens and not as a church.

The average American statesman is fully persuaded that this has been done. He is convinced that in this country church and state are so completely separated as utterly to preclude any possibility of a conflict between the civil and ecclesiastical powers. Such a thing might happen in France or in Portugal; but in this country never. Having been written into the constitution it is finally and definitely settled for all time that church and state must be separate. Any apprehension of trouble on that score is therefore too remote to be seriously considered. The constant harping of some people on this one string is just a little tiresome. Why can they not be satisfied to look up at the constitution and sing, "My country, 'tis of thee"? This, I think, fairly represents the attitude on this question of most of our leading men in public life. Instead of frankly recognizing the extreme difficulty, in a world composed of all people, of church and state mutually apportioning in peace the things which belong to God and the things which belong to Cæsar; instead of striving, by a watchful and consistent application of this divinely established principle, which is indeed written into our constitution, to preserve the rights and liberties of its citizens, both in their relation to the state and their relations to the church, our statesmen often act as if existing institutions might be best preserved by simply shouting, "Great is Diana of the Ephesians!"

I doubt whether it is clearly seen that, if this principle is to be logically and consistently applied in its full bearing, the state can recognize no church as a church. It has to do with the church's members only as they happen to be its citizens, or as a purely secular corporation organized under its laws for purely secular purposes and therefore, like every other corporation, possessing such powers and enjoying such privileges as may be granted to it by the state without jeopardizing its own legitimate interests.

This is what the great teachers of the Lutheran Church had in mind when they, with Optatus, Bishop of Mileve, of the fourth century, said: "Civitas non est in ecclesia sed ecclesia est in civitate." "The state is not in the church, but the church is in the state;" "not," adds the great teacher of the Lutherans in America, Dr. C. F. W. Walther, "as a church, but only as a number of persons who are at the same time citizens."

The state is therefore in no way concerned with the purely religious activities of the church. Whether it preach the Gospel or "cunning fables of man's invention;" whether it teach truth or falsehood; whether its adherents are saints or sinners, sincere or insincere, believers or hypocrites; whether its worship is inspiring or absurd; whether the morals it inculcates are based upon truth or fiction—with all of those things the state has absolutely no concern; unless perchance these citizens comprising the church should publicly teach and practice things in conflict with the laws enacted by the state for its own preservation and safety. In such a case, the state would deal with these people not as members of the church, but as its subjects or citizens. This was the position taken by our government over against the citizens of Utah who insisted upon practicing polygamy. It never attacked the Mormon Church as a church. It merely exercised its right to compel the citizens of Utah to obey the laws of the state. If, after establishing its sovereignty over the Philippine Islands, both by conquest and purchase, it had dealt with the religious orders directly as with its own citizens instead of conducting its negotiations through a subject of the King of Italy, it might have saved itself some money and possible trouble. In this instance the principle was not logically and consistently applied, with the result that we generously paid twice for the same piece of property and created a situation which is by no means exempt from danger.

If church and state are fully and completely separated; if the distinction between the spiritual kingdom of Christ and the material kingdoms of this world is clearly seen and maintained, then no nation can be either Christian or un-Christian; for the state, as such, is a purely secular thing—"ein rein weltlich Ding," as Luther says.

"My kingdom is not of this world," said Christ to Pilate. If any nation or state were to become fully and perfectly Christian, this saying would no longer be true, for such a state would then have ceased to be a kingdom of this world and have become a "kingdom of God and his Christ." The distinction between church and state would have been wiped out. But we have no promise that this shall be anywhere accomplished before the great consummation at the end of time.

Then, why do churches "politically organized" for the legal accomplishment of certain reforms threaten and intimidate legislators who may refuse to do the bidding of their "Christian voters"? What do these things mean, if not this, that we have not yet learned to logically and consistently apply this principle of separation of church and state? On the other hand, we see Christian men who, for fear of "getting into politics," fail or refuse to perform the first simple duties of good citizenship. For the same reason we have almost forbidden our ministers to possess any knowledge of civic or economic questions whatever. In Maryland we have gone even farther. I am reliably informed that there is among our ancient statutes a law which says that "no Indian, felon or minister may be a member of the state legislature."

BANISHED

Coffee Finally Had to Go.

The way some persons cling to coffee, even after they know it is doing them harm, is a puzzler. But it is an easy matter to give it up for good, when Postum is properly made and used instead. A girl writes:

"Mother had been suffering with nervous headaches for seven weary years, but kept on drinking coffee.

"One day I asked her why she did not give up coffee, as a cousin of mine had done who had taken to Postum. But Mother was such a slave to coffee she thought it would be terrible to give it up.

"Finally, one day, she made the change to Postum, and quickly her headaches disappeared. One morning while she was drinking Postum so freely and with such relish, I asked for a taste.

"That started me on Postum and I now drink it more freely than I did coffee, which never comes into our house now."

Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Write for booklet, "The Road to Wellville."

Postum comes in two forms.

Regular Postum (must be boiled.)

Instant Postum doesn't require boiling, but is prepared instantly by stirring a level teaspoonful in an ordinary cup of hot water, which makes it right for most persons.

A big cup requires more and some people who like strong things put in a heaping spoonful and temper it with a large supply of cream.

Experiment until you know the amount that pleases your palate and have it served that way in the future.

"There's a Reason" for Postum.

THE YOUNG PEOPLE'S MEETINGS

NOTES ON THE CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR, EPWORTH LEAGUE AND BAPTIST YOUNG PEOPLE'S UNION TOPICS

As to Evil Speaking*

YOU would not think of taking your neighbor's life or wounding him with any physical weapon. But you perhaps do not realize that when you say an evil thing about him you are wounding him more grievously than you could possibly wound him with gun or dagger. You may indeed be killing his reputation, which may be a worse calamity to him than killing his body.

It is strange indeed that this terrible item of wrong-doing is so easy and so widespread. It is hard to understand the peculiar pleasure which many people seem to feel in saying unkind things about others. Bad as it is, simply as a breach of good neighborliness and good citizenship, it is unspeakably bad from the standpoint of Christianity and the teachings of Christianity's founder.

This particular problem of life becomes simplified as all problems do when we apply to them the simple and universal rule of love which Jesus laid down. If we care for our brother we will not wrong him. Not only will we not wrong him by saying things about him that are not true, but we will not wrong him by saying bad things about him that are true unless we believe that the things we are saying will do good to others. It is very dangerous, however, to attempt to justify ourselves even on this ground. If we are not extremely careful we shall find ourselves passing from an endeavor to help into an indulgence of that strange human propensity to say evil things about the people we know.

If somebody has wronged us the Master's directions are very plain as to what we should do: "Go and tell him his fault between thee and him alone; if he shall hear thee, thou hast gained thy brother." Dr. Slattery, the gifted rector of Grace Church, New York, had an excellent sermon on this very subject in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD of June 4, the reading of which would make a good preparation for this meeting.

The point of the whole matter is that when an evil has been done to us, what we must be interested in is not to "get square" with the one who has wronged us, not to pass on for general information the story of his error, but to help him out of the error into which he has fallen and to keep intact the friendship that threatens to be broken.

There is a very bad habit, often noticed even among Christians of pronounced and positive spirituality, the habit of ridiculing the faults of others If a man falls short of his profession or deceives himself into thinking that he is doing right when these others think he is doing wrong, they are sometimes apt to laugh about it among themselves as if it were a really humorous thing. Is this very much better than speaking evil in a spirit of unkindness? If any one has done wrong it ought to arouse grief in the hearts of all Christians who observe the error. It is impossible to imagine the Saviour laughing about the evil in any life. And it is made very clear that we must be like him.

Train yourself to be on the alert to see the good things in others rather than the evil things. Parents are often quick and keen to notice the good points of their own children and slow to observe their faults. This is true because they love them. And so we, if we have genuine love in our hearts, will be slow and unwilling to see the faults of others and shall find ourselves noticing and delighting to talk about their excellencies.

* "SPEAK NOT EVIL ONE OF ANOTHER." Christian Endeavor and B. Y. P. U. Topic for Sunday, July 13, 1913. James 4: 6-12.

Passing by on the Other Side*

JESUS was a very subtle and infallible observer and discerner of the thoughts and habits of men. He knew and in the parable of the Good Samaritan emphasized the widely prevalent habit, even among those who make some definite and official claim to goodness, of refusing to face the real facts about the needs of their neighbors. This point of view was well put by Mr. Spenlow in Dickens's David Copperfield, when he said: "It is the property of the gentleman to take things as he finds them." This is precisely what the priest and the Levite did on the Jericho road. They found a man in trouble, and they left him—still in trouble.

The world is getting a different conception now both of what it means to be a gentleman and what it means to be religious. We cannot be truly cultured or truly Christian unless we have a practical and active interest in the needs and distresses of others, and are really trying to help them. The old watchword, "It is none of my business," is less popular than it used to be. If we can change even in some slight degree the distressing situation it is our business. And we are learning that the respectable people who "pass by on the other side" are not vastly better than the disreputable thieves who first wounded and robbed the unfortunate traveler.

Christ gathered the whole of the problem of life into two great principles: We are to love him supremely, acknowledging him as Master, Lord and Friend; then we are to consider that every person whom we meet represents him and must be served and helped in precisely the way that we would serve and help him if it were he instead of them who was in the condition of distress. This principle applies to little things and big, to concrete cases and to broad tendencies and customs. We must not only help all the individuals we can, but we must set ourselves valiantly to the task of so changing society that its wrongs shall be lessened, that there shall be fewer tears, fewer wounds, fewer heavily burdened and deeply shadowed lives in the ranks of the toilers, fewer sins the world over, fewer lost souls.

* "THE DISTRESSED ON OUR 'JERICHO ROAD.' ARE WE PASSING BY ON THE OTHER SIDE?" Epworth League Topic for Sunday, July 13, 1913. Luke 10: 30-37; Isa. 58: 6-9; Isa. 40: 1, 2.

Saluting the Flag

(See Cover)

MORE than two hundred little people, whose fathers and mothers come from a score of different lands, born to different languages and faiths, forced by circumstances to spend their lives in the slums of New York, where they are surrounded with confusion and poverty—it is a beautiful thing to see them gathered about our great flag, united in their love of it and wildly enthusiastic in pledging allegiance to it.

It is not hard for Mont-Lawn children to be patriotic. Patriotism is part of the fun as it is part of the helpfulness of the Children's Paradise. At all the chapel exercises the boys and girls, after waving their smaller flags in the chorus of their flag song, join in saluting the big flag draped behind the platform and reciting their pledge of allegiance. Our cover design shows them grouped on the green lawn, saluting one of the still larger flags as it is being raised to the head of the staff. If the picture could have reproduced the soft breezes, the summer fragrances and the sound of the children's voices, it would be even more beautiful and thrilling than it is.

A million babies will be born this year

Think of the comfort and happiness Mennen's will bring into their little lives

The original purpose of Mennen's was as an infant powder, to comfort little children, to relieve skin irritations, to prevent chafing, and the hundreds of other annoyances which worry babies.

You know how babies revel in it—how happy it makes them—how much real comfort it has brought into their little lives.

Every year millions of babies are rubbed with it. It is the oldest and safest talcum on the market—the one most in demand, preferred by doctors and nurses for its purity. It both prevents and relieves chafing, prickly heat, rash and all skin discomforts to which babies are subject.

Universally adopted by men and women

Mennen's, introduced into the home for the baby, is being adopted more and more by men and women for a hundred different toilet uses.

For sale everywhere 25c, or by mail postpaid.

Sample tin 4c, or for 15c, postpaid, we will send you our "Week End Kit," composed of sample packages of talcum powder, toilet soap, cream dentifrice, etc.

OUR MAIL-BAG

Questions and Answers

Reader, Ironton, Mo. I always turn first to OUR MAIL-BAG. In your answer to X. Y. Z. (May 28) you say: "The wife should begin by loving her husband still more tenderly even though he is unreasonable." Is it possible for love to exist when a man is brutally cruel? I know a case where there are years of patient effort on the wife's part, met by continual fault-finding and nagging on the part of the husband, with almost inhuman punishment for the little children when guilty of minor offenses. If love died and indifference took its place is the wife to blame?

The very essence of love is forgiveness. In a Christian home, this quality should be emphasized more than any other. In all homes there must be much "bearing and forbearing." Yet it is undeniable that sometimes there comes a point where, humanly speaking, forbearance ceases to be a virtue, and love is in danger of being starved out. Such cases are tragically pitiful. It is a hard thing to wholly uproot a wife's love and trust; but once uprooted, who can restore it? The case you describe is unfortunately not an uncommon one. If the offending partner persists in such a course, untouched by a wife's appeals and sacrifices, he has only himself to blame if he brings his home to ultimate shipwreck.

J. C. McW., Eagleville, Mo. 1. It is a familiar saying, sometimes applied to sincere, simple-minded folk, that they are "too good for this world," meaning that they are ill-fitted to cope with the craftiness and wickedness which they are sure to encounter in life. As a matter of fact, however, none are "too good" for this world in the spiritual sense. The more pure-minded, honest, virtuous, clean-hearted, right-living people there are in it the better. Such people may never be rich or successful, as the world looks at success; but they can have the "inward riches" which is far better and infinitely more precious in God's sight. 2. The future life, as the great majority of Christians hold, is to be one of growth and progress in all things—a life of unimagined possibilities of expansion and development. It is reasonable to suppose that children, dying in infancy, will share in this general development, although we have no specific Scripture passage on the subject.

Westfield, N. J. There seems to be some confusion in your mind between Luther's nailing the Ninety-five Theses on the church door in Wittenberg in 1517, and the Protest of Spires of 1529. The Ninety-five Theses were aimed primarily at the sale of indulgences, but they went much further, and repudiated the principles upon which the whole practice rested. The Protest of Spires was signed by Princes John of Saxony, George of Brandenburg, Ernest of Lüneburg, Philip of Hesse and Wolfgang of Anhalt, and by the representatives of the free cities of Strasburg, Nuremberg, Ulm, Constance, Lindau, Memmingen, Kempten, Nördlingen, Heilbronn, Reutlingen, Isny, St. Gall, Weissenburg and Windsheim. By it the signers claimed the right as Germans to freely preach the Word of God and the message of salvation, that all hearers might join the community of believers, and protested against the abrogation of the Act of Toleration of 1526 by the commissioners of the Emperor Charles V.

R. F., Paterson, N. J. The liberty of the press (which is uniformly guaranteed in all the State constitutions), though often attacked, has invariably been upheld by the courts of final decision, even in cases where the lower courts had taken strong grounds against it. In many States, there have been notable attempts to silence journals which had criticized public men, officials, or even judges, but these have ended in ultimate defeat. It is a fixed principle in this republic that the press shall have entire freedom of discussion on all legitimate matters that affect the public welfare, and whenever there has been any attempt to infringe that right the Federal courts and Congress have stood ready to defend it. But there is a sharp distinction between liberty and license, between the reasonable and proper criticism of officials, courts, legislatures and public individuals, and the criticism that runs to slander, lewdness and sheer mendacity. There is nothing, expressed or implied, in the Federal or State constitutions which can be construed as extending encouragement to or promising immunity for such offenses, which can be punished under the criminal laws. Further, a publication that shows open and persistent hostility to government, which tries to break down law and order and to incite others to lawlessness, places itself altogether outside the pale of constitutional privilege, since, instead of being a conservator and defender of the rights of the people, it is attacking their best interests.

Still, the whole question is a very delicate one, and judges and juries would do well to be careful lest they be misled into attacking legitimate rights, which every good American should hold sacred and inviolable.

Mary J. and Louise D., Lexington, Ky. We have some 1,200 little Chinese orphans, boys and girls, under care in a number of mission schools in China, for whom our missionaries are pleading for support. It costs $12 a year to maintain an orphan. You will receive letters at certain periods from the missionary, or from your protégés if they are old enough to write. The work is a delightful one—a real missionary education, full of spiritual surprises, for your protégés learn to look upon you as their godfathers or god-mothers. Send postal for our illustrated China orphan pamphlet for yourselves and friends. Address your application for orphans to be assigned to you to China Orphan Fund, care of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, N. Y. If you do not feel able to undertake entire support, any contribution you may send will be welcomed and will be added to the general support fund.

A pastor in Exeter, Calif., writes: "I knew before I came to this State that there was no Sunday law, but I was surprised to find that even church members pay very little attention to the observance of the Lord's Day. Efforts are being made to bring about a better observance of the day with some measure of success, but we are fighting against great odds. The great fruit industries oppose any attempt to secure a proper regard for the day. Very nearly all the packing-houses run on Sunday, and the young women who work in them are required to work on Sunday, or often to lose their positions. Beginning with the cherry packing in May and closing with the orange packing in February and March, our Sunday school girls, and sometimes teachers as well, are required to work on Sunday or have their places filled by some one else. Plans for picking and packing could be made in such a way as to do away with Sunday work entirely. Even the canneries often run on Sunday." The writer is doubtless one of many good people who would wish to see a better state of things. His description of Sunday labor in California is one which has a parallel in certain mining districts, where seven days' labor in the week operates to wholly deprive a large part of the industrial population of religious privileges. Surely the Christian churches of the State could succeed in awakening public interest in such conditions.

J. M. R., Two Harbors, Mich., a railroad conductor, writes: "In the summer time I run my train and preach the Gospel to people of almost every tongue, by tracts and in various ways. The greater part of them have no other church privilege than this from myself and a few others in service on the road. Thus our Lord is making our place of service a platform to preach Jesus. Another blessed thing about this is that the management of our road are godly men, who help us in various ways." Here is a worthy example for other conductors to follow. We hope there are many who scatter Gospel seed along the track as this Michigan conductor is doing.

D., Bancroft, Iowa. 1. Mr. Beecher, pastor of Plymouth, never renounced evangelical Christianity. He took a liberal view of Scriptural interpretation, but held to the essentials. He believed science and religion to be substantially in agreement. Above all else, he believed in the divine mission of Jesus as Saviour and Redeemer, and that his sacrifice was the one central fact of the Christian faith. 2. We are not to judge others who, according to their own lights, may be striving sincerely to do their duty.

B. P. P., Goldsboro, N. C. In the Eastern lands people wore sandals or very light foot covering. As limestone abounded, making a fine, pulverized dust, the feet were more or less soiled, and it was a part of the daily regimen to wash them. A host would detail servants to wash the feet of his guests. It was a part of Oriental hospitality to attend to this. In lands where different conditions prevailed, the custom of foot-washing, as a part of hospitality, was unknown, ablutions being attended to in a different manner. See article on the subject in any good encyclopedia. The ceremony of public feet-washing is still preserved in the Greek Church.

W. S. C., Oakland, Calif., and C. V. L., Zeeland, Mich. Our paragraph on the passage in I Corinthians gave the view taken by the leading commentators on the subject. While Paul addressed the church in Corinth specifically, it is unquestionable that in this, as in all of his epistolary writings, there is a lesson to the church at large. The best concerted scholarship, however, does not take the narrow view your letter suggests, as to the particular injunction to the Corinthian women being directly designed for womanhood for all time. Read Weiss, Jamieson, Faussett and Brown and other eminent authorities, and you will see how they deal with the question.

Pattick Thomas, Columbus, Miss., would be pleased to learn from some reader of THE MAIL-BAG the name of the author of the poem beginning:

> "A garden is a lovesome thing,
> God wot! Rose plot,
> Fringed pool, ferned grot," etc.

Reader. The disputed passages in I John 5: 7 are found in the following Greek MSS.: the Montfortianus, the Ravinnus (copied from the Complutensian Polyglot), a MS. of Naples of uncertain date, and the Ottobonianus of the fifteenth century. They are not in the oldest MSS., and were probably written marginally to complete the sense of the text and then bodily introduced into the text of the Vulgate.

SIXTY-FIVE OF THESE WERE ONCE CHRISTIAN HERALD FAMINE ORPHANS

READERS of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, who so generously helped to relieve the suffering in India during the famine of 1900, when so many died of hunger, and who for years contributed toward the support of the thousands of orphans left in the various missions after the famine was ended, will be interested to know something about the present condition of these orphans. The accompanying photograph, representing about three-fourths of the Christian community in the city of Ahmedabad, shows the faces of at least sixty-five of these former CHRISTIAN HERALD orphans, and a number also of the second generation. The orphans are now grown up and employed in various ways, having been trained and educated by the generosity of CHRISTIAN HERALD readers. What inspires our greatest praise and joy is the fact that they have been rescued from idolatry and brought to a knowledge of Jesus Christ. Many are very clear in their Christian experience. Few of our men earn more than five dollars a month, and many even less. A plain church in this city will cost at least $5,000, as building material is very expensive. Should our men all contribute a month's wages (which they probably will do when called upon) the sum would be a very small part of the amount required.

ROSSING THE ICE-CLAD HEIGHTS

THE PERILOUS HEIGHTS OF MOUNT McKINLEY

WORKING TOWARD THE SUMMIT

DR. STUCK CONQUERS MOUNT McKINLEY

MERICA'S HIGHEST POINT REACHED AT LAST. THE EPISCOPAL ARCHDEACON OF ALASKA ACCOMPLISHES, ON A VACATION JAUNT, THE FEAT THAT HAS BAFFLED SCIENTISTS AND EXPLORERS

NORTH AMERICA'S highest mountain has at last been scaled. Mount McKinley, the peak that has defied all attempts to reach its summit, now bears at its highest point a six-foot cross, placed there on the 7th of last month by Archdeacon Hudson Stuck, an Episcopal mis- ry to Alaska. Accompanied by Robert G. Tatum, one of his missionary s ants, and Harry P. Karstens and Walter Harper, Alaskan guides, Dr. u undertook the perilous climb as a vacation jaunt after five years of n ant missionary work among the Indians.

T e little expedition left Fairbanks on March 13 and hoped to reach the r ait of the mountain early in May. This was found impossible because ree weeks' delay in cutting a passage three l long through a wall of ice which had been m over the ridge by one of last summer's quakes. The party found many evidences olent earthquake disturbances on the upper s of the mountain. The upper basin shows nce of a violent upheaval. Many of the s are badly shattered but the summits re- unmarred. When the party reached the of the mountain after the descent, a rest was established and a messenger sent into anks to announce the ascent of the mountain e world. A private cable despatch brought ollowing details to Seattle, Wash.:

xpedition successful. Accomplished first lete ascent of Mount McKinley June 7. . Karstens, R. G. Tatum, Walter Harper, and ched top of South, the highest of all peaks, clear day, when it was possible to read all the es of the mountain and other points and make in that the peak we had conquered was the est of all.

Ve successfully carried a mercurial barometer e top and made complete readings and obser- ns, which, with simultaneous readings at en, should permit a close approximation of rue altitude when proper corrections are ap- . Water boiled at 174.9 degrees. The pres- estimate of the summit's height is upward of 00 feet.

Ve were able to read angles on all prominent ts. With field glasses we clearly saw the ole erected in 1910 by Thomas Lloyd expedi- on the North Peak (the lower of the two n peaks).

After completing observations on the summit oisted the American flag on the upper basin, ted a six-foot cross, and said 'Te Deum' on highest point of North America.

"The northeast ridge is the only possible approach to the summit. Due to the violent earthquakes of last July, the higher ridges were terribly shattered, and this added largely to the danger, difficulty, and labor of the ascent.

"We spent three weeks in continuous bad weather, hewing a passage three miles long through this side. This was the chief cause of delay, as we made rapid progress at all other stages of the journey.

"The chief credit for our success is due to Karsten's good judgment, resourcefulness and caution. We did not have a single mishap."

A number of attempts have been made within the last few years to accomplish that which Dr. Stuck has now succeeded in doing. Professor Herschel C. Parker, professor of physics in Columbia University, has made three expeditions with this purpose in view. On his last trip he succeeded in reaching a point within three hundred feet of the summit, but was then compelled to turn back. The pictures of Mount McKinley which are reproduced on this page were taken by one of the members of Dr. Parker's party. On his first expedition in 1906 Dr. Frederick A. Cook, whose claims both to have reached the summit of Mount McKinley and the North Pole were afterward exploded, was a member of the party.

REV. HUDSON STUCK
Episcopal Archdeacon of Alaska

The successful missionary mountain-climber is an Englishman by birth who has been in the United States for a number of years. After graduation from King's College, London, England, and the University of the South he went to Texas and served two years under Bishop Johnston. He was then made dean of St. Matthew's Cathedral at Dallas and there he served ten years. It was a great surprise to his colleagues when in 1904 he withdrew from his position and went to Alaska to take up missionary work. He is known throughout the entire Protestant Episcopal Church by his writings about Bishop Rowe and about mission work in general in Alaska. Those who know him best are not at all surprised by the announcement of his successful mountaineering feat, for he has climbed many of the most difficult peaks in the Alps and in the Canadian and Colorado Rocky Mountains. In the course of his regular work as archdeacon of Alaska it has been necessary for him to travel many miles by dog-team and to learn all the arts and makeshifts of the trail. He is a member of the National Geographical Society.

Archdeacon Stuck is expected back in Fairbanks in August, and in the fall will visit New York as a delegate from Alaska to the general convention of the Episcopal Church.

THE MODERN CHRISTIAN

*A SERMON BY PASTOR CHARLES WAGNER

TEXT: "Go ye therefore, and teach all nations." Matt. 28: 19

IT SEEMS at first as if there were a contradiction between the spirit of the Gospels and the spirit of the age. Something prevails about us like a wind of negation, a breath of atheism; there is no use denying it. If we do not allow ourselves to be dazzled or deceived, we can see that this age has lost something. Wholesome traditions, excellent habits of thought and life, have been slowly suppressed, not by decree or by conscious purpose, but by slow trituration and the march of events.

But if we are to be just, we must admit that there are two sorts of atheism. There is the profane variety, atheism which is impiety, iniquity, brutality. Such atheism as this despises, mocks, ridicules all that is respectable and venerable. This atheism is not a philosophical or scientific movement. It is a form of vice; it is corruption made into a theory and wearing on its wicked shoulders the mantle of reflection.

It is the eternal negation of humanity itself, of all that is beautiful, sublime and venerable. For this wicked impulse to blacken, to soil, to hate, this furious desire to befoul everything in reach, this humor of vicious brutes, is the enemy of all honest men and women, be they believers or unbelievers. All ages have known its hideous face.

But there is another unbelief and another atheism. This variety is present sometimes in very noble and well-meaning souls, who cherish no practical impiety in their hearts, who respect what is respectable, who take no pleasure in soiling what is pure or in blackening what is bright. They do not rejoice when evil appears. They do not glory in dogmatizing about their baseness to give it the appearance of wisdom, nor in advertising it in an effort to make it universal. There are men full of goodness, with clear consciences, who do not share our beliefs. They do not share them for intellectual reasons, for reasons of logic, and reasons of that other logic which comes from the heart. They cannot think as we do; they can not, at least in the form in which we present it to them, find joy in the Gospel or assimilate it to themselves.

Disciples of Christ must ask themselves two questions. First: How can we best combat evil in all its forms, joining forces with all good men against the dregs of humanity? And the second question is: How can we place ourselves whole-heartedly at the service of all whose purposes are honest?

The Gospel for Our Age

One can not speak the same language at all epochs. The Gospel must be retranslated into the language of this time, into the sentiments of this time, into acts which touch and seize the consciences of this time. It is not sufficient to believe oneself, and to be entirely and completely persuaded and convinced; it is our duty to make our convictions bear fruit, for the good of those among whom we live. We must give ourselves to the society about us, with the best of what we possess. "Go and teach all nations," said Christ. He meant: Go and inflame all hearts with the same fire, go and set into operation everywhere that divine force which each one who is filled with the faith feels throbbing at the bottom of his being, and without which the most brilliant epoch is only a queen in mourning, guarding at the bottom of her soul the memory of a good which has been lost forever. It is not enough that the Christian love and understand the Gospel; it is necessary, in order that he establish a connection between the treasures of the Gospel and the spirit of his age, that he love and understand his age.

This age is not so far from the Gospel as we are inclined to believe. When Christ, in his newness, in his divine simplicity, claiming only the title of Son of Man and Son of the Father, sat on the mountain to proclaim the kingdom of heaven, did he bring a new explanation of the universe, the key to all the sciences and all mysteries? Did he set a new knowledge in opposition to an old knowledge, or a knowledge to come? No; he said: "Fear nothing, only believe!" He taught, by his word and by his life, simple and profound confidence in Him who governs all things and knows what we cannot know. Faith is this and nothing else. He proclaimed a great tenderness and a great pity for every creature, a sad and sacred respect for every soul, even the souls which have fallen. He preached humanity, sacred and intangible in its conscience, and he set the human soul on such a height that he said: "What shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world, and lose his own soul?" Now what age has ever had greater respect for the individuality of a human being than the age in which we live? This age, at its best, in the practices and the aspirations of its heart, has not assimilated the mechanical conception of the universe from which results the deification of force. This age, even when it does not call itself soul and when it declares that it knows nothing of spirit, has at least set in evidence that intangible quality of the human being, the grandeur of the weak, the sacredness of him who cannot defend himself. This age, in its inmost conscience, finds itself called to plead the cause of those who themselves have neither voice nor arm to protect themselves. It is an age of justice, or at least of aspiration toward justice, and however the savage prophets may vociferate or the demagogues may hurl unjust accusations, in the inmost hearts of its best men this age has established an incorruptible sanctuary of justice. It is not far from the Gospel.

If Christ Were Here

The Gospel was the signal for the death of the despotic power of the ancient divinities whom men venerated, the gods seated amid the splendors of Olympus, careless of distant and obscure humanity, leaving men to fight their battles, suffer their pains and die their deaths. Another divinity came into being. A suffering God mounted the eternal throne, in the form of the Crucified, a God sobbing in the breast of a man. Men saw descending to earth and bending over them other powers than those fatal powers which crush men and take no heed of their suffering. They saw a divinity who weeps with those that weep, who smiles with those who smile; a divinity who hides himself in the tomb to relieve its blackness; a divinity who is not nonchalance, inaction, pleasure, but the prodigious labor of a creation of which man himself, in his most ambitious flight, cannot conceive the height nor the breadth. And this human divinity who will not quench the flax that still smokes, who will not finish breaking the bruised reed, even though we see as yet on the horizon only the dawn of a nameless day, this new divinity already haunts your dreams, speaks to you in the silence, inspires you and wins your soul to love. Our time, at its best, is not far from the Crucified.

For this age, when it judges calmly of final values, nothing is greater than charity, nothing is more august than the spirit of sacrifice. It is they who devote themselves to others; they who know how to forget their own advantage; it is those who are able to cast themselves into the gulf to fill it and make a bridge of their bodies, it is these who are great in our eyes. They have the best place in the esteem of this age. No, our age is not far from the Gospel.

If He were to come back to-day, the Master, with deep eyes full of pity for all suffering and all vice; if he were to come back to-day, the Master who loves courage and industry, because he was brave and industrious himself; if he were to come back who bravely submitted to living on this earth with no place to lay his head, that he might in his poverty build more freely and more purely the city of the future; if he came back now, how he would love these men to-day who have renounced everything to follow the track of the unknown, these men completely devoted to their science, who are so filled with respect for facts that they are giving themselves to revising the accounts of human knowledge, renouncing all our pompous ignorance, to gain a competence in poverty and labor! If he came back and saw all these who search, who enrich humanity with new means of action; if he came back and saw all those who are consecrating themselves to solacing misery, all those men who have contracted disease themselves to find a rem disease, who have grown pale in the lodg misery the better to study our tares and to to remove them, if he came back, with whor we find him? He would be with all who pierce the black mountain of injustice and to make themselves useful by serving their bors. He would remind us that it was he wh those weighty words concerning the Last ment: "I was naked and you clothed me; prisoner and you visited me; I was hungry fed me; I was thirsty and you gave me drin would call these unbelievers to him and wo to them: "Come, ye blessed of my Fathe would make these publicans his apostles. his church, he would pick up from the dust road the stones the builders rejected; he woul them stones of the corner.

My brothers, let us come to know our better!

We sometimes have the bad and demo habit of complaining too much of our time. of staring at the faults of others, we forge virtues. But was a caricature ever a po Let us be less unjust toward God, Maker of and toward men, our fellows. Your problem i of the problems of your age, and it is blasph sit at the side of the road and complain to cause he did not bring you into the world in t of your ancestors. Let us accept God's ca comes. It is in this age, at this hour, amo people that he has called us by our names. L of us answer: "Here am I!"

We speak of social Christianity. Christia interested in the social questions of the hour. It is well that they are. But if you a to contribute as much as possible toward the difficulties of the day, toward preparing a future, do you know what is the most usefu for you to undertake? It is first of all to m conquer the difficulties among yourselves. example, we furnish in our church a means ture in the spirit of our Master, loving each working unitedly, supporting each other, upl each other, in spite of the diversities of our position, and in spite of the differences in our of belief, we shall have found the grain to s fields. By conquering our own disagreeme shall have won the victory over the world w promised to the spirit of the Gospel, and the remain nothing but to spread the news.

Keep Open the Eternal Spring

Is there not a painful contrast between ou of propagating a better spirit, and the weakne incoherence of our organization? Our attac to our faith, as well as our love of souls, impel us to strengthen our spiritual and m base; to make of our churches a compact an balanced unit where each one is glad to p debt to the whole. Protestants are too nur who have not yet understood the most elem necessity, that of assuring their church a su tial financial foundation. They do not see th lack of material support which causes ideas their footing in the world.

To-day, for him who knows how to see and there is evident a longing for the world of tery, the divine world, the world we cannot with our hands, that we cannot see wit eyes, that we cannot weigh in a balance. yond our labors and our studies, we are beg to show such a thirst for the unknown an longing for the bread of the soul, that the day distant when your age will be grateful to y having kept open and pure the spring where a may drink without money and without price.

Do not content yourselves with saying: "W the children of Abraham," but justify your pr among the men of this age by your conduct, by service for others. And it is my wish that a zeal may seize you to meet the Lord on un paths, to render him homage in new forms bring the heart of this time near the heart great, merciful and pitiful One who brooods th the dark night, bent over our cities filled wit wandering about as sheep without a shepherd

IEN OF LETTERS FOR AMBASSADORS

HE literary men of America as well as the newspaper and magazine men are to have their representatives in the diplomatic corps which will represent the United s at foreign courts during the present admin- tion. Two of the most prominent names in connection are those of Thomas Nelson Page Henry Van Dyke. President Wilson sent to Senate, during the third week of June, the es of these two of letters, nom- ng them respec- y for the posts ambassador to and ambassa- to the Nether- s.

homas Nelson e is a Virginian has achieved himself a na- al reputation by Southern stories. the last few s his books have among the best ers in the field of on. Mr. Page's ointment was osed, to a certain nt, by some of Democrats of native State, but e seems little bt that it will be y ratified by the ate.

HENRY VAN DYKE
New Ambassador to Netherlands

WILLIAM E. GONZALES
New Minister to Cuba

THOMAS NELSON PAGE
New Ambassador to Italy

WALKER W. VICK
Receiver-Gen. of Santo Domingo

r. Van Dyke is perhaps one of the most widely wn literary men of America. He is a poet, a acher, an author, and a professor. He is arded as one of the most distinguished Ameri- poets. Dr. Van Dyke has had a long and dis- guished career both as a pastor and as a profes- . In 1882 he was called from his first pastorate in Newport, R. I., to the Brick Presbyterian Church in New York City. He remained there until 1899, when he was appointed professor of English literature at Princeton University. Dr. Van Dyke has been American lecturer at the Sorbonne in Paris, and has been decorated with the medal of the Legion of Honor in recognition of his literary work.

There are two newspaper men among the recent appointments. These are John B. O'Rear of Missouri to be minister to Bolivia, and William E. Gonzales of South Carolina to be minister to Cuba. Mr. Gonzales has been prominent in the political life of his native State for a number of years and has been associated with his brother in the conduct of the Columbia State, one of South Carolina's most influential newspapers. He is of Spanish descent and has a wide and thorough familiarity with Cuban affairs, as well as an inborn knowledge which it is believed will make his choice for the post a most happy and successful one.

Walker W. Vick of Burlington, N. J., was recently appointed by President Wilson Receiver General of Customs for the republic of Santo Domingo. This appointment is in accordance with the treaty arrangement between Santo Domingo and the United States, which empowers the President to appoint the collector of customs at an annual salary of $6,500. Mr. Vick will be required to live in Santo Domingo and will enter upon his new duties as soon as the business of his New York legal practice can be adjusted. Mr. Vick has been actively associated with all of President Wilson's political campaigns and especially distinguished himself by his conduct of the financial end of the Democratic National Committee's affairs during the last election. The announcement of his appointment immediately had a favorable effect on the bonds and on the financial interests of Santo Domingo in New York City.

Mr. Meredith Nicholson of Indiana, another well-known author, has been appointed minister to Portugal and will enter upon his new duties within a few weeks.

THE REAL CAUSE OF THE FINANCIAL UNREST

N ALL the leading countries of the globe today, the subject of the widespread financial depression is being discussed. Those writers who have devoted much study to the condition affairs, assign various causes, and their views collated and skilfully presented in the Outlook June 21. The Cedar Rapids (Iowa) Gazette ikes the keynote at the outset when it indicates tremendous outlay for the Balkan War and the vitable hoarding as the primary cause of the ney stringency. The Gazette says:

> war sends billions of real money into hiding. The Balkan t hundreds of billions into seclusion, and so long as there is ossibility of a continuation of the conflict or any likelihood other wars, the money will stay in hiding. War is an exsive thing, and when there is a conflict between nations lions of dollars that would be invested in business enterses must be wasted. It takes the world no little time to oup the financial losses entailed by a war.

Agreeing with this, the London Statist adds: "In e last resort, it rests with the investing public to p all wars and even to prevent unpopular wars." ie Bankers' Magazine, of New York, takes a nilar view, and says that British investors have d some recent experiences teaching them that ar loans are unprofitable investments. The Brit- n banks lost heavily on the Boer War. "If inves- rs were to decline to take stock in war loans except exorbitant rates, it would operate to prevent ar and to preserve peace."

In the Times of New York, M. Guyot, a distinished French statistician, recently stated that the ilitary expenditure of the six great European owers composing the Triple Alliance totaled 2,000,000,000 yearly. To this he added another llion of dollars to represent the labor of young en withdrawn from productive operation to rengthen the fighting forces. The Springfield epublican, speaking of conditions at the present oment, says:

> Nearly all the Great Powers, and of course bankrupt Turkey, re eager to borrow in the aggregate vast sums at the earliest pportunity. In addition to these demands the field of borrowg has been widely extended of late by the inclusion of China nd India, so that the demands upon capital are probably reater than ever before.

The New York Sun, while believing that the oarding of money in Europe may be exaggerated, ays that even before the Balkan War the financial ondition generally was so close as "to leave no argin for accident." When capital is on a strong oundation, war does not greatly shake it. Explaining the present financial situation, the Sun continues:

> In 1911 the first danger signals began to be displayed by securities, and in that year and 1912 the great London market was conspicuously characterized by congestions of new promotions, which were only slowly and with increasing difficulty overcome. Practically all countries continued, nevertheless, to press vast borrowing demands on capital and credit. The tale of the present year made the notice of danger unmistakable. As early as January a Credit Foncier loan of $100,000,000 in Paris was only two and one-half times subscribed, although the rate of interest was 3½ per cent., whereas a 3 per cent. loan had been subscribed nineteen times over in January, 1912. In March a $100,000,000 offering of Prussian treasury 4 per cent. notes failed of complete subscription in Berlin, and at the same time $37,500,000 of Imperial and Prussian Government bonds were barely sold. Meanwhile the indigestible mass of securities underwritten abroad was steadily augmented by fast-following public and private undertakings, and the convincing proof of practical exhaustion of the European capital market was given when $55,000,000 of Brazil Government 5 per cent. bonds offered under Rothschild auspices received less than a 10 per cent. subscription.

This seems to abundantly justify the comment of the London Economist that the world is "overloaded and overarmed." And the Philadelphia Record gives the additional news that "France has been projecting a loan of $200,000,000."

> Fifteen bond issues of national and colonial governments and corporations have been left in the greater part upon the hands of the underwriters in London, who have been obliged to borrow money to carry them. . . . The financial authorities are coming to the conclusion that the demand for money far exceeds the world's supplies.
> All our cities and States are borrowing for buildings and canals and roads and every conceivable form of expenditure. The State of New York is now raising $27,000,000 on short-time notes, because for the moment its bonds are unsalable, though they are among the most desirable of all investments. In fifteen years New York City has added $913,000,000 to its bonded debt, and its annual budget has very much more than doubled. In seven years the per capita debt of this city, whose debt is relatively moderate, has increased from $37.03 to $55.56; that of Pittsburg from $56.24 to $81.33; that of Baltimore from $40.34 to $71.64; and that of Cincinnati from $86.48 to $140. A number of State and city bond issues during the past few months have failed or have been carried through only by increasing the rate of interest.

Here, in the United States, we have contributed to some extent in adding to the prevailing stringency. Then there are other contributory causes to the stringency. An incident like the recent St. Louis and San Francisco railway receivership naturally produces a bad effect on the standing of American investments abroad, making foreign investors more cautious.

Last of all, the tariff situation has to be considered as an influence in the money situation, and it is frankly discussed by various journals, without any special evidence of anti-administration feeling. The New York Evening Post says:

> We have no idea of denying that public policies may have had some hand in the financial unsettlement. Anything that makes the investor hesitate will tend to disturb the markets. Even of the tariff it must be said in fairness that any extensive change in schedules, whether upward or downward, interferes inevitably with some of the normal plans of the business world for a season's trade, and therefore might affect the market. It is the simple fact of impending change and intervening uncertainty which causes hesitation. But these are wholly temporary influences; they could not of themselves explain the recent market; and, as a matter of fact, they were not needed for explanation.

The Topeka Capital upholds the government as against the complaints of Wall Street speculators that it is responsible for bringing on one of the street's periodical panics, and says:

> It is the apparent intention of the government to reach a settlement of some of the pressing questions that the government has been facing, and with as little delay as necessary. Also it is the government's intention to carry out its public pledges. This [the chance that stocks may decline further] need not worry the owner of such securities, while it causes disaster to the margin trader who is on the wrong side. Unfortunately 98 transactions on the Stock Exchange out of every 100 are of the latter character, of margin buying and selling, instead of actual purchase and sale for investment, and hence the excited flip-flops of Wall Street when margins are gradually or suddenly wiped out, even though dividends are in no wise affected. The country in late years has come to regard the palpitations of the stock market less seriously than in the past. If Wall Street intends to have a stock market panic at all, President Wilson will be lucky to see it occur early in his term.

From all of which it would seem that the causes of depression are not local, but world-wide, that the chief factors in producing present conditions are the great war loans and the extraordinary peace expenditures for army and navy expansion to keep up the mad craze for "world supremacy." Other causes, as pointed out by the journals quoted, while important in themselves, are trifling in comparison and by no means beyond remedy, especially those that relate to the indebtedness of some of our States and cities. It is well to know the facts concerning these matters, and to realize that, while the present is a time for exercising care in financial dealings, there is nothing to excite undue apprehension. Probably the best commentary on the whole is that of the Springfield Republican, which remarks that "it is a poor time to borrow."

THE JUDSON CENTENARY

ADONIRAM JUDSON

JULY 13 will mark the one hundredth anniversary of the landing of Adoniram Judson in Rangoon and the beginning of American Baptist foreign missions in Burma. Judson had gone out as a missionary of the American Board, but on becoming a Baptist appealed to American Baptists for support, and as a result the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society was organized. The centennial of the organization of this society will occur May 21, 1914. The combined centennial is to be celebrated during the coming year by the Baptists of the Northern States, the Southern Baptists joining the Northern in the celebration, as Judson is rightly claimed as the first foreign missionary of the Baptists of the South as well as of the North.

In Burma the centennial will be observed by a series of meetings next December, beginning December 10 in Rangoon, and continuing in three-day gatherings in that city, Moulmein, Mandalay and Bassein. The lieutenant governor of Burma will preside at some of the sessions, and reminiscences of the great pioneer missionary will be given by older missionaries and native Christians who remember him. The presence of Christian converts from practically all of the many tribes of Burma will be a feature of the celebration. There is also to be a unique centennial exhibit, which is now being prepared. Representatives of other Baptist missions in the East and many of the missions of other denominations in India and Siam are expected, together with a good-sized deputation from America. Many of the visitors from this country will go in a body on one of the Judson Centennial Tours, visiting Baptist missions on the Pacific before reaching Burma and taking in the India missions on their way home after the Burma conventions.

To make the centenary in Burma of lasting practical value the missionaries and native Christians have set before themselves the securing of a special centennial offering of 100,000 rupees ($33,000) and the increasing of the number of Baptist church members in that province to 100,000. In this country the Baptists of the North and South, including woman's circles, Sunday schools and young people's societies, as well as the united churches, will join the coming year in a great educational campaign centering around Judson. Northern Baptists will also emphasize the history and present work of their society—the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society. A historical text-book on the one hundred years of foreign work is about to be issued, written by Mrs. Helen Barrett Montgomery, for use in classes and for individual reading. A new Life of Judson, written in popular style especially for the boys and girls, is being prepared by the well-known author of juvenile stories, J. Mervin Hull. A comprehensive historical volume, covering the century of the work of the Foreign Mission Society, is being written by the former foreign secretary of the society, Rev. Thomas S. Barbour, D.D. Other books are also projected.

Judson Day, July 13, is to be observed in Baptist churches all over the country with special sermons by the pastors and the reading of letters written by Adoniram Judson and his wife, Ann Hasseltine Judson, telling of their arrival in Burma. More elaborate plans have been made for the campaign in the Sunday schools, especially in January, February and March of next year, and the whole campaign will culminate at the meeting of the Northern Baptist Convention in Boston in May, 1914, when the centennial of the Foreign Mission Society will be observed with noteworthy exercises.

Mrs. Harriet C. Stevens, who has now retired after years of service on the field that Judson opened in Burma, writes of the growth of the work in later years. On the foundations laid by the splendid self-sacrifice of the great pioneer missionary, there has been built a great active native Baptist church in Burma. From persecution and ostracism the Christians of Burma have advanced to positions of honor and respect. Mrs. tSevens briefly tells the story of nearly half a century of missionary work in these words:

This land, called by the ancients "Suvanna Bumme," the "Land of Gold," has for just one hundred years been the scene of missionary effort by the American Baptists. July 13, 1813, Adoniram Judson landed in Rangoon, having been ordered out of India by the East Indian Company.

October 5, 1865, two children of missionaries to Burma sailed to carry on the work of their parents. At that time, just after the close of the Civil W American ships sailing for the East were few and far between. Passage w however, obtained on an ice ship sailing for Calcutta, and after four mont and four days the "city of palaces" was reached. One week later a sm coasting steamer took us to Rangoon, where we arrived February 22, 18 The station to which we had been assigned was Prome, 250 miles up the Ir waddy River, then the northernmost of our mission stations, only fifty mi from the frontier of Burma proper. The province of Pegu, in which Pro was situated, had been taken by the British in 1852, and occupied by our m sion the following year. We found three small churches established amo the Burmese, with an ordained native pastor in charge of each, in the to and district, and a good boys' school in the town.

We found three women who had learned to read before they became Chr tians, and with one of these opened a girls' school. The children of heath parents were taken out of school as soon as they knew how to read, so befo they had reached that stage we instilled into their minds a catechism of t Christian religion and hymns, that they might have at least a slight knowled of the truth.

During the first ten years a brick chapel was erected near the bazaar, that passers-by might learn of the true God as well, as a place of worship f Christians.

Three wooden chapels had been burned on this site, so the government i sisted on a brick one being built. This entailed much anxiety and care procuring the necessary funds, and in the oversight of the building operation as a contractor could not be afforded. In addition to the preaching, teachin and building, the care of the sick added much to our work. As the heathe resort to charms and incantations to appease the evil spirits when they are il of course Christians must give that up, and are at a loss to know what to d There was a civil surgeon for the British officers, and he opened a dispensary the jail, it being the only place at his command. Naturally many did not ca to go to the jail for free medicine even, so we were the main resource. We ha an old bamboo structure honored by the name of hospital, and when that wa full, the sick found room for themselves on our veranda or under the hous Diet as well as medicine must be looked after, so that our hands were ofte filled to overflowing. Some people call the Burmans undemonstrative like th American Indian, but we found those under our care most appreciative an loving. They do not fawn and flatter like some Eastern peoples, but once ge into their hearts and you are there to stay.

On our return in 1877 from a two years' furlough, they met us at the statio with great demonstrations of joy, and carried our luggage to the house tri umphantly on their heads. At the house they had provided for us a fine dinne having hired a cook who un derstood English cooking. An other ten years of happy labo was spent among them, durin which in 1885 occurred th third war of the British wit the Burmans, which resulte in the overthrow of their kin and the taking of Burm proper, thus throwing open th whole country to missionary endeavor.

At the end of our secon furlough in 1889 we were asked to take charge of Moulmein, our oldest station. It was a great wrench to leave the work and people of Prome, but it was very encouraging to work among a people of the third generation of Christians and see how they developed intellectually and spiritually.

The church there not only supported its pastor, but also an evangelist to travel about, and a Bible woman. Some of the children of the early Christians were prominent in business and teaching and in government employ. One Burman educated in America was a doctor, and had a dispensary, and the people had learned to go to the government hospital, so our cares in that line were much diminished, though by no means entirely eliminated. Here another race, the Talaings, claimed our attention, and Mr. Stevens became quite proficient in their language, preparing books for them, etc.

Here the boarding-schools had been brought to a high degree of efficiency. No longer have girls to be hired to be educated; they go to school paying all the charges, eagerly trying for the coveted prize of a "teacher's certificate." In 1902 we were transferred to Insein, a suburb of Rangoon, Mr. Stevens having been appointed to revise Dr. Judson's Burmese Bible.

In this center we had the privilege of seeing from time to time our "children in the faith" from both Prome and Moulmein. Our Christians, from being a little despised group huddled in a mission compound, lest they suffer at the hands of heathen neighbors, are a highly respected portion of the community. During the last war the government admitted that the Christian officials were the only loyal ones, the only ones on whom they could depend. Among the few holding the highest office the government gives to natives are three of our earnest Christians. One sent three sons to England to be educated, another has now two sons in America, all at their own expense. In their cases, as in many others, it has been proved that "Godliness has been profitable in this life as well as in the life to come."

SOME NOTES OF THE ORIENT

—ANOTHER FAMINE is threatened in China. A cable message from Bishop White, in charge of the Anglican Mission in Honan Province, says: "The famine is very severe. All Honan is interested. Is feeling very serious." It is said to be caused by extreme drought. For several years crops have been poor. Last summer rain failed entirely in Honan. A missionary writes that starvation is staring many people in the face. This section of China borders on our north, Kiangsu Mission on the west.

—THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has received from missionary friends in China a sixty-page illustrated album, relating the pathetic story of the great famine of 1910-11. To every contributor to our China Famine Orphan Fund we will mail one of these books free. The book has a preface in English, and the fifty-five photographs have each an explanatory title in English, with corresponding title in Chinese. It contains also a large map of the famine region. For those who wish to possess a pictorial souvenir of the great famine, this is an excellent opportunity. Your gift will be applied to the support of our 1,200 Chinese orphans at our mission stations. Send early, as there is only a limited number of these albums. Address, "China Orphan Fund," THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

—JAPAN, LIKE OURSELVES, has its "jingoes," but it has also a substantial residuum of common sense among its people. The delegation of Japanese who visited Secretary Bryan on June 18 represented the best conservative thought of their nation. One member of the party, Dr. Soyedo, declared it was "a crime for newspapers to print stories" about the possibility of war between the two countries. "Trade and peace are what we want," he said. He reviewed the long-established friendship between this republic and Japan, and concluded by saying, "Japan regards the United States as a country to be looked up to as one looks up to a teacher."

DAILY MEDITATION

FOR EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR

BY REV. J. H. JOWETT, D.D.

SUNDAY, July 13. Romans 12: 1-8. "Present your bodies . . . unto God." I put a coin in the offertory: but do I yield my body in holy sacrifice? Do I present it to the Lord as the minister of his will?

There is my bodily hearing. Do I offer the faculty to God that my rs may listen to the cause of his kingdom? There is my bodily sight. n the Lord use my eyes in the search of lost pieces of silver? There are y lips. Are they at his disposal for the messages of his grace? Has the rd the use of my body?

For this is the teaching: It is the will of the Spirit of God to become in- rnate again in my flesh. He would use my body for the transmission of s ministries of life and grace. It is a marvelous dignity to which I am lled: to be used as the vehicle of the King's will! When an earthly king rites his name in my album the album is glorified. But for the King of ngs to write his name in the volume of my life and through it to convey e tidings of his love and power enrolls me in the holy circle of the friends God.

The Lord seeks the temple of my body. He will make it his home. He ill fill it with the light of his Presence. He will make it gladsome with s joy, and fragrant with his peace. "If any man will open the door I ill come in."

MONDAY, July 14. Exodus 3: 1-14. "I have surely seen the affliction of my people. . . . Come now, therefore, I will send thee." Does that seem a weak ending to a powerful beginning? The Lord God looks upon terrible affliction and he sends a weak man to deal ith it! Could he not have sent fire from heaven? Could he not have rent ie heavens and sent his ministers of calamity and disaster? Why send a eakling when he has round about him mystic "horses and chariots of re?" Why choose a man when the archangels stand ready at obedience?

This is the way of the Lord. He uses human means to divine ends. He orks through man to the emancipation of men. He pours his strength nto a worm, and it becomes "an instrument with teeth." He stiffens a rail reed and it becomes as an iron pillar. He touches the lips of the umb, and the dumb speaks with the voice of God. Our God delights to use hings that are weak to confound the things that are mighty. White ants an eat away the strength of stalwart trees, reducing them into dust.

And this mighty God will use thee and me. On every side there are Egypts where affliction abounds. There are homes where ignorance reeds, there are workshops where tyranny reigns, there are lands where ppression is rampant. "Come now, therefore, I will send thee!" Thus aith the Lord, and he who gives the command will also give the equipment.

TUESDAY, July 15. Exodus 3: 15-20. "Thus shalt thou say, The Lord God of your fathers hath sent me." It is strengthening to be associated with strong men. There is vital inspiration in noble kinships. It is something to drink at Jacob's well; it is far better to kneel at Jacob's altar. It is something to tread the Appian Way with remembrances of the apostle Paul: it is infinitely better to sit at the table of the Lord and eat of the bread which made the apostle strong. It is good to read of the Lord going with Paul to Macedonia, but far better is it to have the promise that the same Lord will go with me to Birmingham, or Manchester, or New York. "The Lord God of your fathers hath sent me."

And so I can be linked with the fathers in personal experience. I can taste the same grace as Augustine. I can share his faith with Luther. With Andrew Bonar I can "draw water out of the wells of salvation." I can drink with Bunyan from the spring at the foot of the hill, I can rest with him in the pleasant arbor, and with him I can gather lilies in the vale of peace. Their experiences are promises for me. Their triumphs unveil my resources. Their songs lead me to the springs of my delights.

And so the story of grace is the revelation of my Lord. All history calls to me as I go to my task. "The God of our fathers" is "the God of their succeeding race."

WEDNESDAY, July 16. Exodus 4: 1-9. "And Moses answered and said, But—" We know that "but." God has heard it from our lips a thousand times. It is the response of unbelief to the divine call. It is the reply of fear to the divine command. It is the suggestion that the resources are inadequate. It is a hint that God may not have looked all round. He has overlooked something which our own eyes have seen. The human "buts" in the Scriptural stories make an appalling record.

"Lord, I will follow thee, but—" There is something else to be attended to before discipleship can begin! Obedience is not primary: it must wait for something else! And so our obedience is not a straight line: it is crooked and circuitous: it takes the way of by-path meadow instead of the highway of the Lord. We do not wait upon the Lord's pleasure: we make him wait upon ours.

There need be no "buts" in our relationship to the King's will. Everything has been foreseen. Nothing will take the Lord by surprise. The entire field has been surveyed, and the preparations are complete. When the Lord says to thee or me, "I will send thee," every provision has been made for the appointed task. "I will not fail thee."

THURSDAY, July 17. Exodus 4: 10-17. "Now therefore go, and I will be with thy mouth." And what a promise that is for any one who is commissioned to proclaim the King's decrees! Here can teachers and preachers find their strength. God will be with their mouths! He will control their speech, and order their words like troops. He does not promise to make us eloquent, but to endow our words with the "demonstration of power." Eloquent words may be impotent: commonplace words may go forth like an army. A few smooth stones from the brook, when guided by the Lord, can bring down giants!

"And I will teach thee what thou shalt say." The Lord will not only be with our mouths but with our minds. He will guide our thoughts as well as our words. He will be as sentinel at the lips. He will be our guide in meditation and judgment, and he will bring us to enlightened ends. All of which is just this: He will give us mouth and matter.

This does not put a premium upon idleness. The Lord guides when men are honestly groping. He gives us fire when we have built the altar. He works his miracle when we have provided the five loaves. He sends his light through diligent thinking.

FRIDAY, July 18. Matthew 10: 24-31. "The very hairs of your head are all numbered." Providence goes into details. Sometimes, in our human intercourse, we cannot see the trees for the wood. We cannot see the individual sheep for the flock. We cannot see the personal soul for the masses. We are blinded by the bigness of things: we cannot see the individual blades of grass because of the field.

Now God's vision is not general, it is particular. There are no "masses" to the Infinite. "He calleth his own sheep by name." The single one is seen as though he alone possessed the earth. When God looks at the race he sees every man. The eyes of the Lord have distinguishing vision. His love is "full of discernment." He sees the sparrow, the lily of the field.

And, therefore, I need not fear that "my way is overlooked by my God." He knows every turning. He knows just where the strain begins at the hill. He knows the perils of every descent. He knows every happening along the road. He knows every letter that came to me by this morning's post. He knows every visitor who knocks at the door of my life, whether the visitor come at the high noon or at the midnight. "There is nothing hid." "The very hairs of your head are all numbered."

SATURDAY, July 19. Isaiah 6: 1-8. "In the year that King Uzziah died I saw the Lord." He lost a hero, and he found the Lord! He feared because a great pillar had fallen: and he found the Pillar of the universe! He thought everything would topple into disaster, and lo! he felt the strength of the everlasting arms. When Uzziah lived Isaiah had forgotten his Lord. He so depended on the earthly that he had overlooked the heavenly. Uzziah concealed his Lord as a thick veil hides a face. But when the earthly king passed the eternal King was revealed: as when by the passing of a cloud the moon reigns radiant in the open sky.

And thus it is that apparent calamity is often the minister of revelation. The great storm clears the air, and luminous vistas come into view. The howling wind of adversity drives away the earth-born clouds and we see the face of God. Our sorrows prove the occasion of our visions. We see new panoramas through our tears. Bereavement gives us spiritual surprises, and death becomes the servant of life. So it happens that days begun in gloom end in revelation, and we keep their recurring anniversaries with deepening praise. Isaiah lost a hero and found his Lord! He found his Lord, and through his Lord he found his mission. "Here am I; send me."

THEY SHALL SEE HIS FACE"

Rev. 22: 4

SEE His face! O joy divine!
What richer treasure could be mine n when, these earthly trials o'er, e his face forever more!

see his face! My soul, rejoice see his face and hear his voice; count my toilsome journey o'er,
l see his face forever more.

recious hope born from above!
ression of our Father's love!
find in heaven a resting-place!
know that I shall see his face!

lood-washed throng redeemed from earth olding God! Oh, sound it forth, all who will may find their place heaven, where they shall see his face.

MRS. A. E. BARNES.

SUMMER

WINTER is cold-hearted,
Spring is yea and nay;
Autumn is a weather-vane
Blown every way.
But the summer days for me,
When every leaf is on its tree.

When the sparrow's not a beggar,
And little wren's a bride,
And the larks hang singing
O'er the wheatfields wide;
And the anchored lilies ride
On the waters as they glide—

Before green apples blush,
Before green nuts embrown—
Why, one day in the country
Is worth a month in town!
Is worth a year and a day;
Then come to the woods away!

HENRY P. LYMAN-WHEATON.

SUNDAY

CALLED by whatever name,
Pagan or Christian signed,
God's day is still the same,
A day for rest designed.

One of the mystic seven,
Blessed evermore of God:
Hallowed from arching sky
To trodden, earth-worn sod.

How shall we keep the day
A rest for weary feet,
Surcease from work and play,
A benison complete?

More than all other days,
The gift of God it seems:
Down shining paths of light,
His grace and glory gleams,

Lifting our hearts above
To seek our Father's care,
On this his day of rest,
Our sacred day of prayer.

M. D. TOLMAN.

THY HAND

IF I could feel my hand, dear Lord, in thine,
And surely know
That I was walking in the light divine,
Through weal or woe:

If I could hear thy voice in accents sweet
But plainly say,
To guide my trembling, groping, wandering feet,
"This is the way"—

I would so gladly walk therein, but now
I cannot see.
Oh give me, Lord, the faith humbly to bow—
And trust in thee!

There is no faith in seeing. Were we led Like children here,
And lifted over rock and river bed,
No care, no fear,

We should be useless in the busy throng,
Life's work undone.
Lord, make us brave and earnest, true and strong,
Till heaven is won. —Selected.

The New Evangelism

IN HIS able and convincing contribution to the absorbing discussion on evangelism (the third instalment of letters on the subject appears in this issue) Dr. Biederwolf places his finger squarely on the real seat of the trouble. He does this by skilful elimination, showing that the individual evangelist or "personal worker," the pastoral evangelist and the denominational evangelist are not involved in the present controversy, which in his opinion deals in the main with public union evangelism. It is well to keep this point clearly in view, since it has been demonstrated, in the report of the Men and Religion Movement, that of the permanent additions that have come to the churches, a majority is distinctly referable to public union evangelism. And it is this kind of evangelism that is needed by the churches to-day.

But to make the evangelists' efforts fully acceptable, and to prepare the way for successful spiritual work, there must be greater harmony between pastors and evangelists. There are methods to be changed, faults to be remedied, and the evangelists themselves must be the principal factors in bringing about new and improved conditions and better relations. Dr. Biederwolf writes very plainly on these matters, as one who has the future of evangelism deeply at heart. His conclusion is that the church must assume charge of evangelism. Pastors and evangelists must co-operate, each and all doing their share toward making the union complete, harmonious, and thoroughly efficient for service. Such are the essential features of his proposition for a great continent-wide spiritual organization, on new lines, and within whose ranks every evangelist could find abundant scope for his energies as a Gospel messenger and a winner of souls.

The Heart's Gifts

IN a letter from a missionary correspondent of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD in a heathen land, received not long ago, the writer told of a little native lad who, when a number of converts were making their offerings at a service, took a collection plate, and, setting it on the floor, stood upon it with his brown naked feet. Then with folded hands he faced the missionary, who gazed on him in surprise. In broken syllables the child explained that, having nothing else to give to the Lord, he gave himself!

In many of the gifts to God's work that come through the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, we find evidence of this beautiful spirit of personal dedication. The heart prompts the gift, and goes with it. We give ourselves with every real love-offering. A few days ago, a lady handed in at THE CHRISTIAN HERALD office $100 in bills, directing that $25 be apportioned to the Gospel Mission work of Joseph Vital in Yonkers, N. Y., and the balance for the support and Christian training of the orphans in care of our missionaries in China. She would give no name, but the heart clearly went with the gift. Another reader, a Massachusetts lady, wrote about the same date: "The 'Beautiful Testimony' on the editorial page of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD of June 18 has touched me, and as I had some money given me lately, I have resolved to give $200 of it to use for the helpless children of China. I do not want my name published." Here also is the evidence that the heart went with the gift. Both these good friends had in loving remembrance the Master's injunction in Matt. 6: 1-4, which promises a blessing to those who do their alms, not for the world's praise, but for love of Him whose great heart went out to all humanity.

Reckless Exposition

SOMEBODY has been kind enough to send to us several copies of a series of expository addresses issued under the title of the "Bible Study Club." As we presume they are sent for comment, we feel at liberty to say a word concerning them. As "studies" of God's Word, they are of a kind to make the judicious grieve, being apparently the product of a corps of writers who discard practically all the results of the highest Bible scholarship, and put forward an assortment of theories and conclusions that have no place in any recognized theological system. Claiming to harmonize all sectarian doctrines, they have produced a conglomerate as unsound, unscholarly and unfounded as could well be imagined. These studies are so full of glaring absurdities that they would be passed by as so unimportant as to be unworthy even of comment, were it not for the fact that they are being widely distributed and are liable to fall into the hands of many who may be grossly misled by them. When we note that they teach universalism and second probation; abolish future punishment and extend divine clemency even to the Sodomites; teach that the work of Creation needed 49,000 years, and speculate as to the size of the population of Eden before the fall, we are moved to inquire in what wonderful seminary these "teachers" took the course in systematic theology, whether they ever studied Greek or Latin, and how they ever came to be ordained and let loose upon a defenseless world as Bible expositors. If they will supply us with this information, we may have something further to say concerning the "Bible Study Club."

Haste and Thoroughness

MANY will regret that the old Corner Clock has seen its day. We retain a fond and lingering memory of its conspicuous place in our grandparents' homes. When in its presence, we were fully conscious that with each stroke of its pendulum it was measuring time as faithfully and accurately as if it had been a living thing. As the months passed by, it would not be one whit behind the seasons of the year. It won and held our entire confidence. So slowly and persistently did it perform its service that, as we went into the library, it would greet us with its soothing message, giving the supreme assurance that there was "Plenty-of-time! Plenty-of-time!" It seemed to instil a spirit of confidence and contentment that made life worth while. We found time for business, for home pleasures, for social pastimes, for the enjoyment of real life. Somehow, we had time to attend to things—and to attend to them rightly—for we worked to the tune of the old Corner Clock.

But to-day we have a small clock on the mantel that jerks and sputters all day long; a little nickel-and-brass concern that persistently urges us to "Get-there! Get-there! Get-there!" We catch its impulsive sentiment; the blood tingles through our veins, nerves reach high tension, minds are set awhirl, and we unconsciously keep time with its jerking suggestion. We rush and fuss all day long until we are half crazed; and even during the silent hours of night, our slumber is often interrupted by its insistent "Get-there! Get-there! Get-there!" In such state of mind and body, we are apt to slight the details of life's mission and work, blunder small things, shun matters that seem to be i nificant. We live too fast. The "short-cut" prevails. Duties, privileges, responsibilities, consciously escape notice. Real purpose and se in life fade away under the stress and strai hurry and hustle. We become overburdened. our hands find to do is not done rightly, for w all things either in too much haste, or compl unto ourselves, and not as "unto one of these children." All this because we want to carry the suggestion of the fussy little clock that tell to "Get-there! Get-there! Get-there!" Let turn over a new leaf and learn to value time living with more deliberation, by measuring tematized service with the length of the pas hour, and keeping at our work—slowly, stea persistently, learning thoroughness, and so to l that the little things of life and the details of vice are neither overlooked nor shunned, but re nized as stepping-stones to greater things.

Our New Ambassadors

IN THE appointments of Thomas Nelson Page, well-known author, as ambassador to Italy, of Dr. Henry Van Dyke as ambassador to the N erlands, President Wilson has once more han the laurel wreath of official recognition to Am can literature. On several notable occasions in history men of international literary repute h represented us at the courts of London, Vien Paris, Berlin and Rome, but none has better ear the right to such an honor than the brilliant ginian whose books have delighted a full generat here and given him an enviable literary reputat abroad, and the scholarly pastor who is hailed the "Dean of American Poets." While we h no official school of diplomacy, like some Eu pean governments, we certainly make no mistake choosing for such important diplomatic posts m who represent the finest type of Americanism whose sound judgment, rare culture and wide perience are in themselves an equipment for a emergency. It is all the better too when they ha not an office-holding record. If there is one p which above all others we can afford to keep out the reach of the professional politician, it is the p of ambassador.

"Our Children for Christ"

ON JULY 8 the World's Sunday School Conve tion, the largest and most representative ga ering of its kind, meets at Zürich, Switzerland. ocean steamers and overland trains, hundreds delegates have been speeding thither from all lan civilized and heathen. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD h two representatives among the delegates, who w send reports of the convention work, and an inte esting description of the memorable gathering, wi photographs, so that all of our readers will be fu informed on this important event. Zürich has p pared for the convention in a loyal, Christian spir and in the ancient city's official welcome to t guests, and it asks them to come in the spirit prayer and service, and to accept "Our Children f Christ" as the password—a motto which might w be adopted by churches and Sunday scho throughout the world.

—RECENT CABLE DESPATCHES from Morocco give the bare d tails of a critical situation in that country. On June 12. London cable stated that a Spanish warship, the Gene Concha, had accidentally gone ashore on the Moroccan coa and had been immediately made the target of thousands of Moor sharpshooters. Two men escaped in a rowboat, and on b picked up by the Spanish gunboat Lauria. Induced the capta to rush to the rescue. The gunboat succeeded in re sixty-three of the crew, thirteen of whom were wounded. Th men are missing and nine have fallen into the hands of t Moors. The commander of the vessel fell dead on the bri shot through the eye. The cruiser Reina Regente bombarded group of natives for two hours. Negotiations have been beg for the surrender of the captured sailors. The Spaniards ha taken the offensive with a combined movement from Tetua Alcazar, and Arzilla. Fighting has occurred at Alcazar. R inforcements from Spain are being sent. A later cable advi says: "A French force has been ambushed and seriously c up in Morocco. The column which has been operating in th Tabla region was surprised by the enemy, and suffered a loss sixty-four dead and one hundred and nine wounded."

Stefansson Sails for the Arctic

THE Canadian Arctic expedition under Vilhjalmar Stefansson left Victoria aboard the steam whaler Karluk on June 17. Most of the members of the party were on board. r. Stefansson with Dr. Anderson, zoologist, and ames Murray, oceanographer, will overtake the arluk at Nome. The vessel sailed under command of Captain Robert Bartlett, who took Rear dmiral Peary's ship, the Roosevelt, to within four undred miles of the North Pole. Besides the crew here are in the expedition fifteen scientists, most f whose names are known throughout the world. Ir. Stefansson, who is a seasoned arctic explorer, elieves that there is a vast area of land between laska and the North Pole, containing 1,000,000 quare miles of territory, and it is his determinaion to discover that new continent, make careful aps of it, and make permanent record of all facts elating to whatever science. The Canadian Govrnment has had sufficient faith in the man and in is vision of the undiscovered country to fit out his hip with every needed supply and the company of cholars regardless of expense. The expedition as gone with the intention of spending three winers and four summers in the gigantic task undertaken. Should the expedition prove as successful s is contemplated, it will close forever the chapter f geographical discovery, for the only place on the whole earth where there can possibly be land of any considerable extent the very existence of which is nknown to us is this one for which the explorers ave gone to search. The morning before sailing he explorers received a farewell visit from Sir Richard MacBride, premier of British Columbia. At night the premier gave a banquet in honor of the event, presenting Mr. Stefansson a piece of plate in commemoration of the departure of the expedition. In the afternoon the mayor and a committee of the aldermen of Victoria went aboard the Karluk and presented to the explorers four British flags to be put up over any lands discovered. In the arctic regions thus far discovered, as in all new countries on the earth, the explorer and scientist is quickly followed by the missionary, and under the flag of a nation newly set up there is placed the standard of Christ's royalty in fulfilment of the prophecy:

He shall have dominion also from sea to sea, and from the river unto the ends of the earth. (Ps. 72:8.)

Faith and Works Necessary

IN HIS letter to an officer of the Salvation Army, Vice-President Thomas R. Marshall says some very true and practical things. Among other things he says: "I am convinced that the genuine Gospel of Jesus of Nazareth is the only thing that can eradicate evils in business and political life. And more and more am I convinced that Peter and Paul must be blended in order to make a twentieth century Christian. Faith and works are both required. The measure of the great success comes from the personal touch which it gives its work. It is not that you dispense charity in the old-fashioned sense, but that you dispense love and give the erring and the fallen a knowledge of the fact that they are the children of the selfsame God, and may, by his grace, rise to greater heights. May it be given to all of us to understand that Christianity is not a system of ethics, a code of morals or a list of dogmas, but that it is a vitalizing influence for the individual man." This demand for an unselfish devotion to the interests of others as a necessary fruit of Christian faith by the Vice-President calls to mind the apostle's searching statement of the requirement of good deeds:

Even so faith, if it hath not works, is dead in itself. (James 2: 17, R.V.)

Fifty Years Counting Money

MISS EMMA R. GRAVES, a maiden lady of eighty-four, has spent fifty consecutive years counting Uncle Sam's money. There are important reasons for her long employment by the government or she would not be rounding out her half century of public service. There has been constancy personified. Her hands have been just as regular at their task as the hands of a clock are in marking the flight of time. There was integrity complete. The most remarkable fact in the history of this servant of the government is that she never made a single mistake in counting the money during the half century of her employment. This service to the government, though humble, was as necessary as that of the highest officials of the nation, and was rendered with a constancy, honesty, accuracy, and fidelity to trust which dignified humble toil, and elevated a modest life to the altitude of the highest principle and noblest patriotism. The constancy, integrity and fidelity to trust which the woman who has counted money for the government manifested are required in the spiritual life, as expressed in the injunction of the apostle:

Be ye steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labor is not in vain in the Lord. (I Cor. 15: 58.)

Judge Rebukes Woman's Extravagance

IN a Brooklyn divorce case the other day Supreme Court Justice Aspinwall delivered a most stinging rebuke to those women whose extravagance in social life had led to such domestic infelicity. A woman sued her husband for absolute divorce and $78,000 a year alimony. The husband made affidavit that the plaintiff "by her extravagant expenditures, her insane desire for social display and her irascibility of temper, which has been aggravated by her overindulgence in intoxicating liquors, has estranged the defendant and made his home life unbearable." He claims that he inherited $1,000,000, and that largely by his wife's reckless extravagance the fortune has been reduced to $350,000. Her serious claim of alimony, amounting to twice as much as his annual income, provoked this terrible rebuke by Judge Aspinwall: "An income according to her station in life. That sounds very well in novels, but many a woman has to marry a rich man before she has any station in life at all. The plaintiff has been living too high, and has taken advantage of her husband's softness in her wicked extravagance, thereby losing his interest and respect. These society women live at the fashionable hotels, smoke cigarettes, and drink wine. They spend money like water instead of trying to make happy homes for their husbands. They don't want children. They had rather ride the length of Fifth Avenue with spangled poodle dogs than care for their own flesh and blood." Such frankness from the bench would have a tendency to put a check on the reckless expenditure of those who marry for money, and then sue in the divorce court for liberty and more money. Many husbands are guilty of the same sinful extravagance. The class of women the judge justly rebuked might pay attention to this pen picture of the ideal wife and mother:

That they may teach the young women to be sober, to love their husbands, to love their children. (Titus 2: 4.)

Foolishly Dives Two Hundred Feet

A YOUNG architect was arrested a week or so ago on a charge of attempted suicide for diving from the Washington Bridge two hundred feet into the Harlem River in New York City. It seems that the young man had not contemplated suicide at all but performed this venturesome deed to show his courage. Socially he was of a timid disposition, and his companions rather teased him, charging that he had not the courage to propose to or marry a certain lady. He determined he would show them he had greater physical courage than any of them. The life-risking jump from the bridge was the result. It is a wonder he lived. The bridge is nearly twice as high as the Brooklyn Bridge. It is said no one who ever jumped from it before has survived. The young man's explanation of the cause for his act indicates that he is a crank, and yet the laughs and jeers of companions often drive young men and women into acts of physical and moral danger and death. Moral courage in the face of ridicule was manifested by the great leader when challenged to compromise in these words:

I am doing a great work, so that I cannot come down. (Neh. 6: 3.)

Snake Breaks Up Excursion

A RATTLESNAKE broke up the annual picnic of a Brooklyn Sunday school the other day at Fairview Grove, N. J., on the Palisades opposite the upper part of New York City. Irwin Kiellberg, a young sailor from the Navy Yard, who was doing his part in the entertainment of the children, was helping some boys and girls up a cliff when a rattlesnake bit him on the leg. A companion sailor, at his command, made a tourniquet of a handkerchief and applied it to the young sailor's leg. He was removed to the hospital at Dobbs Ferry, where, though his limb had swollen to enormous proportions, it is thought he will recover. The accident so filled the company with fear that many went back to the boats and returned early to their homes. It would hardly be thought a rattlesnake would venture to a place little more than the width of a river from a city of four million people. But he found the Palisades a good enough place for his house, and his ancestors had claimed the territory first. This is not the first religious company that snakes have disturbed. They did deadly work to the children of Israel. Moses put the brazen serpent on a pole and those looking on it lived. Christ took this event as a figure of the serpent bite of sin, and of himself as a cure.

As Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of Man be lifted up: that whosoever believeth in him shall not perish, but have eternal life. (John 3: 14, 15.)

MEN AND EVENTS IN THE WORLD'S NEWS

NOW, put down all these impressions. Put them in a long row and add them up somewhat after the manner that a bank clerk totals a column of figures, and like the sum of such a column there will be one big impression of Bishop Brent. Simply this: He is human."

With these words a writer in one of the great metropolitan newspapers concludes an article made up of impressions gathered from the stewards and some of the passengers who were fellow voyagers from Liverpool with the Rev. Charles Henry Brent, Protestant Episcopal missionary bishop of the Philippines. Bishop Brent attracted considerable attention a few weeks ago by crossing from Liverpool as a steerage passenger, faring in every way like his emigrant companions. The newspapers both quoted and misquoted him very widely, attributing all manner of motives for his action. In an interview granted at the Church Mission House after his arrival Bishop Brent is quoted, and we believe correctly, as follows:

The Bishop Who Crossed in the Steerage

Copyright, American News Co.

BISHOP CHARLES H. BRENT

"I made my trip in the steerage for the purpose of investigating, and I had to be very careful as to the questions I asked, because, if my fellow travelers had got the idea that I was traveling as an investigator, they would not have given me their confidence. I may add that I shall respect the confidences they gave me.

"While I should pronounce the people from northern Europe whom I met in the steerage of the Carmania desirable material for American citizens," said the bishop, "I am convinced that there is peril for our standards in the class that we are getting from southeastern Europe. On their account, there is apt to be some day a worse mix-up than can possibly happen from the admission of Japanese subjects. We don't have to assimilate Japanese; but those five hundred Continentals that came over in the Carmania steerage are the very kind of people that do have to be assimilated here.

"This government ought to make a careful investigation into the subject of immigration from Europe. As an American citizen I do not see why we are called upon by backward nations to do work they are capable of doing and which they should do. They should at least make the people that they send us clean. I talked with many of the other steerage passengers, and I found that a lot of them thought the same way as I did. The Scandinavian and English passengers were disgusted.

The bishop mingled freely with the steerage passengers during the voyage and became very popular. This close contact with those of whom he speaks gives to his opinion a great additional value.

MR. C. D. USINGER, superintendent of the Faith Mission, in connection with the St. Nicholas Collegiate Church, New York, recently passed to his eternal reward. Mr. Usinger was converted at the Bowery Mission about ten years ago. He was a veteran of the United States Army, and for some years had lived an ungodly life. His conversion, however, was of the most pronounced and dramatic character. He began at once a life of the most earnest and disinterested Christian service. For two successive winters he worked in the Bowery Mission Bread Line, being present every night throughout the winter months, dealing with men personally, and without any remuneration. Shortly after this he was appointed superintendent to the Faith Mission, in which he rendered splendid service. He was an earnest co-operator with the evangelistic committee, doing much effective tent and open-air work.

Faith Mission Loses Its Superintendent

His loss is mourned by an exceedingly large circle of friends. He leaves a widow and one son.

WE ASK neither home nor food, rather give us a house where we may again meet together to worship God." The people who said these words looked poor indeed. They were also weary, for after a night of arduous toil and excitement they had had to take a long walk in the afternoon's burning heat in order to be present at the last service which Mr. Jansen was about to hold in their far mountain district. Mr. Jansen writes briefly of this journey of many miles of walk and climb, at times over such paths and mountains as well nigh exhausted the accustomed Cebuans themselves. The following is gathered from the brief account he gave: "Back again from a trip! Although the famine among our congregations continues, the work is going forward. Thank God there has not to be in this island in these days a famine of God's Word! Fifty-five of those who so eagerly waited to declare their faith publicly by baptism were baptized, but as we had expected a number more of new candidates from a distant village we wondered at their non-appearance at the last special service which was held on the Sunday morning. On Sunday afternoon we went on to a place some three hours distant to hold an open air service, and old and young walked cheerfully over an open country in the scorching heat. What was our surprise to see the missing candidates came hurrying on some time later.

Cebuan Christians During Famine

"They arrived just in time, for I was leaving right after. The reason they gave for non-attendance was adequate indeed. Their entire village nearly had been burned down, and so they had been detained! Homes made of grass, so low built as to seem to be continually in reach of the irregular flame from the improvised lights. Owing to the hurricane there are only a few houses standing in whole districts. Our faithful evangelist and his wife were anxious as to where they should gather the scattered congregation for the services in case of rain. They made no comment on the miserably uncomfortable way in which they themselves were living. In that locality there was just one house of fair size left standing. It was for sale, as the family who owned it were eager to leave the famine districts.

"Before starting off on the long homeward trail I gathered together the most needy of the people. There was little difference between their degrees of misery. Those villagers whose homes had been burned were in greatest need.

"When the Christians understood that through Christians in distant lands they were to receive help they one and all began to plead, 'We do not need it, pastor. We have still roots to eat, but we do need a church where we can worship God together even when the rain shall have come.' What can we do for such a people? We would care for their poor suffering bodies, but they care more for the things of God. 'What will you have me to do?' I asked them. There was no hesitation in their decision. They quickly told me about the house that was for sale, and before I left them they were assured of a place where they could meet for worship." ELIZABETH W. JANSEN.

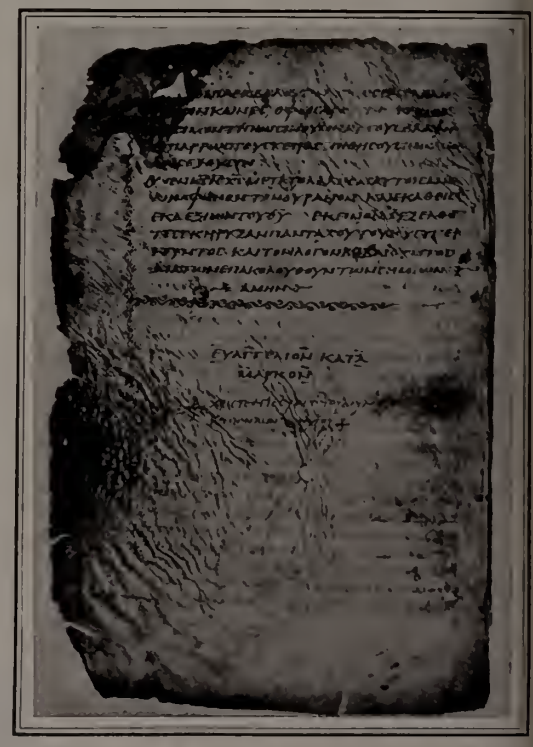
THE Freer manuscript of the Memorabilia of Jesus, and especially the addition which it makes to the Gospel of St. Mark, has attracted considerable attention during recent weeks. The secular and some of the religious press of America has hailed the manuscript as a "new find" in spite of the fact that it was purchased by Charles L. Freer of Detroit from an Arab, Ali im Ghizeh, in 1906, and copies of it have been in the possession of several large libraries for many months. Mr. Freer bought from the Arab 187 sheets of vellum, goat and sheepskin bearing a Greek text of the Gospels in the Western order, Matthew, John, Luke and Mark, all in the script of a single writer. Though the edges of the sheets show the results of years of wear, the text of the parchment pages is quite legible. This text was evidently gathered from scattered copies of sections of the Gospel by its devout writer, for it shows plainly by the display of regional characteristics that it was copied from those fragments which, in widely separated parts of the Roman Empire, escaped the destruction of Diocletian in 303 A.D. There are in the manuscript 160 corrections made by erasure and rewriting. Some of these were made by the original scribe, evidently as he compared with the older text, and some by a later scholar. A very careful investigation by experts has proved, however, that none of these corrections were made later than the sixth century and that certain marks found on the first pages of each Gospel were made by drops of candle grease, left perhaps from occasions when the manuscript was shown to visitors at the ancient monastery where it reposed.

The Freer Manuscripts of the Gospel



THE LAST PAGE OF THE GOSPEL OF ST. MARK IN THE FREER MANUSCRIPT

These findings lend a greater semblance of truth to the story of the Arab trader, who claims to have unearthed the manuscript from a stone jar buried near the ruins of a monastery, the head of which was martyred in the time of Diocletian, and which was finally destroyed in the thirteenth century. The text given in this new source is in few essentials different from that already known. The most important addition is made to the end of the Gospel of Mark. After verse fourteen follow six more. These have been translated specially for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD by Professor Charles Fremont Sitterly of the department of Biblical literature of Drew Theological Seminary. This translation is as follows:

He showed himself in another form (to two) of them as they were walking into the country. And these also went and told the good news to the rest, but not even did they believe them. Later he showed himself to the eleven as they reclined at table, and he upbraided them with their unbelief and hardness of heart because they had not believed those who had seen him alive.

And they excused themselves, saying that this age is one of lawlessness and unbelief under Satan. An age being under the wicked influence of spirits (or influence of wicked spirits) it does not recognize the true power of God, on which account they already rendered conspicuous your righteousness, answered these to the Christ. And the Christ replied back to these same, that the mountain of the years has completed the authority and rule of Satan, and it draws near that day of doom, for on behalf of sinners I was given up unto death so that they should turn back unto the truth and no longer be sinners. So that they should inherit the spiritual (kingdom) in the heavens and the undying glory of righteousness. But going into all the world proclaim the good news to all creation. He who believes and is baptized shall be saved, but he who disbelieves shall be condemned. Moreover signs shall accompany those who believe such as these . . . in my name. . . .

Dr. Newell Dwight Hillis, writing on this subject, says:

"Now, a child can discern the difference between the simplicity and beauty, the majesty and dignity of the Gospel itself, and this variant. Doubtless on the earlier manuscript some scribe wrote this passage on the margin. Later on, through excess of reverence, another scribe, living a century later, in copying the page upon his knees included the marginal note in the text. Other extraordinary variations appear. So different are they that Professor Sanders seems to have proved that the scribe who wrote these four Gospels copied them from at least seven independent manuscripts. The probabilities are that this scribe may have determined to make the round of the great Christian centers and copy all the writings in the possession of the leaders of the early church."

THE "LOST CHORD" IN EVANGELISM

FURTHER LETTERS ON THE GREAT QUESTION: "IS EVANGELISM DYING OUT?" BOTH SIDES CONSIDERED
DR. BIERDERWOLF REVIEWS THE CONTROVERSY

THERE is not the slightest indication of any decline in popular interest in the discussion over the absorbing question: "Is Evangelism Dying Out?" Letters from evangelists ar and far continue to reach THE CHRISTIAN ERALD, and from the tone of these communications is evident that the writers regard the controversy of vital importance for the future of evangelism. is agreeable to note that the discussion on the iole is conducted in the most friendly spirit all und.

In the third instalment, which is printed below, e leading place is assigned to a letter from Dr. ederwolf, which is timely and helpful:

·. Biederwolf on the Evangelistic Problem and the Remedy

THE discussion of the subject of evangelism is . far more important at this particular time than ·en the majority of the most ardent churchmen ay perhaps be inclined to think. What is meant / evangelism? What phase of evangelistic work uppermost in the minds of those asking and of ıose attempting to answer this question? I warıt it is not individual evangelism. There is no roblem here. Individual evangelism is not a thing talk about; it is a thing to do. The pity is that ore of us are not doing it.

I warrant it is not pastoral evangelism. There little if any problem here except what to do with ıe pastor who is not evangelistic. Neither is there ny serious problem connected with evangelistic ·ork done by the denominational evangelist workıg within the lines of his own church; no problems t least but what are comparatively easy of solution. While it is true that many of the weaker evangelists re doing or are attempting to do union evangelistic ·ork, it is also true that most of the stronger evan·elists are not for various reasons doing denominaional work. And there are reasons, many of them, hough not pertinent to the present discussion, why nion work far more than denominational work is alculated to meet the present-day demands of the ingdom. And I warrant it is to this kind of evan·elistic work more particularly that men's minds ·re reverting, when they think of the discussion now ınder way. It is well to understand clearly the nain issue.

Now, there are two things to be said just here: First. In the writer's mind much of the hope for he coming kingdom lies in the combined effort of he pastors grouped in the various towns and cities n a heroic, earnest and sometimes oft-repeated ampaign of sane and thorough evangelism. Some nay take exception to this, but the limits of this discussion will not permit us to argue it. My belief is based on the record of the past. That record, so far as numerical increase is concerned, is humiliating enough as it is, but what would it have been apart from such work as we are discussing? Let the minister who harps so continually against evangelism face that question squarely and answer it fairly.

In connection with the Men and Religion Forward Movement, in which the writer had the privilege to serve as dean of the Evangelistic Message, a survey of church life and activities was taken in nearly three score of the largest cities of the land, and the charts, made up from the figures presented by the pastors themselves, revealed the fact that by far the largest additions to church membership on confession of faith and otherwise have come about as the result of public evangelistic services; and in every case, without one single exception, the year or two following such effort was characterized by larger accessions and keener activities and heavier benevolences than had been the case for many years prior to the series of successful union evangelistic services. These facts speak for themselves.

Second. It is, however, exactly in regard to this kind of evangelism that the most serious problems present themselves. There must be a greater harmony between the pastors and the evangelists. This is at least one crying need of the times. What could speed the kingdom more? But this harmony is lacking. There is prejudice, jealousy, suspicion and antagonism. Why? Because the ministry is wrong? No. Evangelism is at fault. And certain aspects of evangelism must be altered, certain features must be eliminated, certain faults must be remedied before confidence on the part of the pastors can ever be secured, or the desired co-operation attained. The trouble is just there.

Now, what is the remedy for all this? We answer emphatically: Federated church control! This and this only will relieve the situation. Evangelism has always suffered through its own mistakes, and it always will, until it is brought within proper ecclesiastical direction. Dr. Torrey says: "We have too many organizations now." Then let us get rid of some of them, or all of them, and get together in some way and do business. Mr. Mahood says, "The probability is that men who are abusing this holy office would be the first to thrust themselves into such an organization, and the purpose of the organization would be at once frustrated." Not if it were rightly officered by pastors and evangelists with proper ideals. Mr. Bromley says: "It would merely shift the problem." Well, it's time to shift it somewhere; we cannot let the situation cure itself. It has had time to do this and it has failed, and, some want us to believe, miserably so. I believe God is calling to the church to-day to take charge of evangelism and the work of the evangelist, just as she has always taken charge of the pastor and his work. The modus operandi we can consider later. Not a few men in the pastorate and the evangelistic field have fairly well defined ideas in regard to this. But it is as certain as the rising and setting of the sun, that we shall never get very far out of the present discouraging situation until we make some thorough, carefully thought-out effort to do it. I trust the discussion will be continued.

Is the Trouble with the Churches?

IN YOUR letter, which appeals to me strongly, you say: "Since the Men and Religion Movement, evangelism has been under fire." This is true, for neither were attended with the success the leaders had expected in all towns. Then as to "evangelism being under fire," this is also true. It was the same when Paul preached, and when Jesus rebuked the Pharisaism of his day. Then you ask: "What has become of the old-time note of the evangelist?" With some it is still in the preaching. In others, that note is lost in the harmony of this worldly age. Some have lost it in the frost felt in the average congregation, others in the ring of the money-changers' counting-room and in the effort to float a movement that has more of the commercial than has hitherto been known in evangelistic meetings.

As to the trained evangelist, that's the only kind I should want. Why take men whose experience does not tally with the pastor's?

As to "evangelism dying out," it's as dead as it can be in some parsonages, as well as in the churches. I would as soon try to hold a meeting with a lot of wooden Indians as some of the churches I know. Evangelism is as truly fruitful to-day as ever if pastors and church officers only have the faith to break through whist, the dance halls, Sabbath desecration, and commercialized tendencies of this twentieth century materialistic, sensual age.

True Evangelism Cannot Die

FOR the past three seasons I have restricted my work to the towns and villages of Canada of 5,000 population and under. The time at my disposal this season was all filled up months ago. The results, in professed conversions and additions to the churches, have been the best in twenty-five years.

The church is suffering from worldliness, materialism and infidelity, for which the higher criticism is largely to blame; but I find everywhere both pulpit and pew crying out for the help of evangelists in whom the spiritual note is not a "lost chord."

Many things have changed in recent years, but human nature is still sinful, and needs a Saviour who is "mighty to save." The evangelism which stands fast by the Old Book, preaches a Saviour who atoned for sin by his death and who saves from sin, is not dying, and will never die out.

Stage Methods Out of Place in Evangelism

IS EVANGELISM dying out? From the evangelist's standpoint, it appears to be. I have never known a season when calls for such work have been so few. Evangelists and evangelism have always been targets for critics, both friendly and unfriendly; but now they are being wounded in the house of their friends. Conferences are of value and are much needed; but the wide publicity given to certain features is to be deplored. The sins of a few are being imputed to all.

Without doubt there is need of a reformation in the evangelistic work. The high tide of evangelism of a few years ago led many well-meaning, earnest men into the work who, I fear, were "stage-struck." The Spirit of God did not lead them, and consequently has not indued them. As a result, extremes in manner, method and message have been resorted to to attract attention.

The situation now should lead us all to prayer and a complete surrender to the Holy Spirit's leading. Our churches are in a serious condition spiritually and now need, and will always need, evangelism inspired of God and evangelists called of God.

The Field Ripe to the Harvest

IN NO time during my evangelistic life have I received so many calls for evangelistic meetings or have the churches been more willing to make preparation. I have never found people more ready to respond to the Gospel call. A larger number of the converts I now receive are men. I have recently returned from a tour of Australia, and found the people there just as responsive. I unhesitatingly say evangelism is not dying out. There are neither symptoms of its doing so, nor any reasons why it should. C. R. L. VAWTER.

Reforms Needed but the Outlook Hopeful

THERE is doubtless some evidence to bear out the claim that evangelistic campaigns are not as fruitful in results as they were a generation ago. Certainly communities do not seem to fall under the same sense of conviction, or to be moved to the same degree of religious fervor, as heretofore. The influences of modern life tend to spiritual atrophy, and the process is hastened by the loose views regarding the Bible which now so generally prevail.

But several notable campaigns which have recently been held in Western cities prove that it is still possible to penetrate the hard shell of spiritual indifference and reap an abundant harvest of souls. Easy-going, lethargic preaching will not do this. The distinctly emotional type of evangelism has also ceased to be effective. Nevertheless, the old truths, proclaimed with passion, with the Spirit's power, and with proper emphasis upon man's ruin, sin, and judgment, will always be attended with "signs and wonders following."

One fact may be stated with all assurance: If the Gospel has lost its power God has nothing to take its place. The evangel of Jesus is his last word to a dying world. Evangelism will thus remain the supreme responsibility of discipleship until all men have heard the saving message—and that day is not near at hand.

New York City. HUGH R. MONRO.

We Should Not Judge the Many by the Few

AFTER having been in the evangelistic work for twenty years, I take this opportunity of saying that I am in full accord with Dr. Chapman's letter as published in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. The sensational commercialism of a very few evangelists has brought evangelism into disrepute; yet evangelists as a class are among the truest and best of men, many of them working for small compensation, and denying themselves the home life enjoyed by pastors and other Christian workers. The world ought not to judge the many by the few.

Rochester, N. Y. MILTON S. REES.

Evangelism Stronger To-day Than Ever

EVANGELISM is not dying out. There are more evangelists in the field than ever before (estimated by some to be 750), and practically all seem busy. Evangelistic meetings are unusually large and successful from every standpoint.

There is constantly being added to the ranks of evangelists men who are not called of God, or gifted by grace or nature for this work. These may give the impression that evangelism is waning. Places where these men labor and do not make good present a difficult problem for the future evangelist, who must restore confidence.

I have been in the work for over twenty years, traveling over the entire country, and have been vice-president of the Interdenominational Association of Evangelists for several years, thus putting me in touch with all classes of evangelists, and I am frank to say they are among the most self-sacrificing, consecrated, fearless men to be found in the ministry. While they are remunerated according to their ability and success, they make no definite stipulation. Last year, at the Conference of the Interdenominational Association of Evangelists, steps were taken to make certain stipulations for membership which are calculated to keep the standard high and above reproach.

I firmly believe that instead of evangelism dying out, it is securing a deeper hold on the masses, and will continue to do so, for it is the plan of the Gospel for the redemption of the world. H. C. HART.

MODERN DRESS

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER, JR.

Margaret E. Sangster, Jr.

DO PEOPLE come up to you, girls, and say with earnestness and sometimes a tiny bit of anger shining out of their eyes: "Aren't the modern dresses awful?" and "What do you think of Susan's new suit?" and "Have you seen the ball gown in Madame's window?"

Well, they ask me all of these questions, every morning, and yes, many more, by the little white messengers that make the East and the West of my world meet.

I think that you all must certainly have some thoughts about clothes. Every girl has. And, after I have shown you just what some people have written to me, I want you to give your ideas about the matter.

First of all I am going to show you a very emphatic little article that was handed to me not long ago. It is entitled "An Appeal to Christian Women," and is by Maria E. Howard.

"Never has there been a time when a heavier responsibility has rested on the Christian women of the world, and particularly those of our own dear country, than now.

"The men of the world, as well as of the churches, are rousing themselves to overcome abuses in civic life and to make it easier for them to live clean and honorable lives; and we women are joining with them in prayers and efforts to break down that colossal evil which is desolating so many thousands of our homes. But, my sisters, there is confronting us now one which has even greater power to debase and blast the lives of both sexes, and one wherein the responsibility rests wholly on ourselves. I must speak plainly and tell you that I refer to the wholly immodest and almost indecent style of dress which is being followed at the mandate of the god of Fashion. That it is destroying the delicate sensitiveness of our daughters, you must feel if you quietly think of all our mothers and grandmothers taught us, and contrast these lessons with present-day standards; and what of our husbands and sons and brothers? They are telling us that we, yes, we are placing temptation in their way at every street corner, more subtle, yet as great, as that of the demi-monde; the temptation of mental suggestion by means of our dress which psychologists are now proclaiming to be such a powerful force in its influence on character and action, and which is causing thinking men to say (as I have heard them): 'The Christian women of this land should take this matter up.'

"'What can we do?' you ask. We can unite and say as bodies of Christian women and as individuals, 'We will not follow or endorse this slavish devotion to and following of indecent fashions in dress set by the world's god of Fashion and his votaries.' What if this world says: 'Oh, you must be in the fashion and not peculiar!' My sisters, when you belong to God's people, who have been called to be a 'peculiar people, a holy nation,' can you not dare to be peculiar for the sake of our precious sons and brothers, whose purity of mind and soul we are endangering? We may think, in the conscious purity of our own minds and thoughts, that we are not, but men know themselves, and they are telling us that we are. Our sons, our precious sons, sent out from under our loving care to develop their glorious manhood, where we have hoped and prayed all good and helpful influences would surround them, are met at every turn, in places where evil should never be thought to lurk, by this terribly subtle one of thought suggestion made possible by our style of dress, and instead of carrying out our God-given mission of being the greatest blessing to man, oh, I ask you in an agony of earnestness, are we not in danger of becoming manhood's greatest curse?

"Do let us resolve that we, as Christian women, individually and collectively, break away from this debasing tyranny of fashion, and let our dress only and always express and cause in the minds of others thoughts of whatsoever is pure, lovely and of good report.

"If, in the opinion of some, straight lines are more to be desired than flowing skirts, these can be easily adopted without adding to them the display of such closely clinging and thin materials, and, my sisters, can we not resolve, at least for ourselves as women professing to be living for others, to make this sacrifice for the sake of those dearer to us than our own lives? I leave the question with you."

Now, girls, do you agree with Mrs. Howard? I want you to tell me exactly what you think.

Here is an extract from a letter that was sent to me anonymously:

"It is my opinion that many girls are now discouraged and downhearted because of the evils of dressing. My heart goes out to girls who have not been taught the proper way to dress. I believe it would help this movement that has started in many States to rid society of this trouble, if many of the girls would work against it. Most of us do the best we know, and then scoff at the one who does not know. Do you not think we should help others this way too?

"Many girls will not listen to our talk, although we mean only good. A few can not work alone and keep the friendship of the girls they are trying to help. Hundreds of girls are reading your page and many of us would be truly glad if you would talk on this."

I read in one of the daily papers a short interview with a famous Frenchman. He was very much amused, and in a measure disgusted, with our so-called "Parisian fashions."

"Why," he said to the reporter, "the French women do not wear dresses like that—no! Your 'imported' gowns are only the ones that my well-dressed countrywomen do not care to be seen in, so the clever modistes send them to America!"

A great many other girls have writen to me about the beauty or the ugliness of the clothes that are being worn this year. They have talked about dress until my mind is a confused jumble of silks and satins and muslins and rattinet.

Very soon I am going to have another article about clothes on my page. And I want you to help me with it by sending in your ideas on the subject. Tell me exactly what you think about the types of dress that you see every day. Do you think they are immodest, and can you wear them without a feeling that they are just a little different from anything you have ever worn before? Then it seems to me that we will get to the root of the matter. So I, too, leave the question for you to answer.

A WOMAN TAMES A SAVAGE TRIBE

RARELY in recent years has the power of the Gospel to "tame the savage breast" been more strikingly illustrated than in the experience of Miss Annie Coope, an American missionary, whose letter to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is printed below. She writes from Cristobal, Canal Zone, Panama, under date of May 16. Miss Coope is the first English-speaking missionary ever permitted to remain among the wild San Blas Indians. She has been in the village of Nirgana since February 12. The San Blas Indians never before allowed a white person to remain in their country over night. Her letter follows:

"THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is sent to me as a Christmas present by dear friends in Providence, R. I., and I assure you it is a very welcome visitor. I am a little over one hundred miles from Colon City and Cristobal post office; but traffic along this coast is so irregular and changes with the wind that I have to wait on the traders coming and going, and it has now been seven weeks since I received a letter.

"Three years ago I came up this coast to start a mission. I had heard that the Indians were a neglected people; and not only that, but they would not allow any foreigners to stay in their village. All traders and travelers must leave the land before sundown and sleep on their schooners, but not among the natives. I also heard of one chief who had lived in New York a few years in his younger days. He desired his people to be educated, and had been to a Protestant minister in the city of Panama to plead with him to send a lady teacher, and to show that he meant it he left his boy of eleven years of age with the pastor's family. I made inquiries and found it was true. Then I started out, not without first committing my ways unto the Lord. I arranged to go on a small launch to the extreme point of the republic on the Caribbean coast. We stopped on our way at several Spanish villages, where I gave out tracts and Gospels and sang and spoke to the natives."

She encountered much opposition from the priests in that region, but finally accomplished her purpose. On several occasions she met with violence from fanatical tribesmen, and her life was in danger. She was compelled for a time to give up, but she returned afterward and ultimately reached the distant island of her search after many thrilling adventures. She continues: "I am now living here and teaching the natives of Jesus' power to save. Last August, when I came back to the isthmus, I awaited the chief's coming to Colon, and he was very glad to hear that I would come. He said the children could not read or write; the priests only taught them prayers. His eldest boy was seven years old. He was thinking of sending him to one of the British islands, but was very glad I would come. He then said: 'How about a house? We have only grass houses.' I said: 'Well, I'll get along in a grass house.' So we made arrangements. He went back to his people, and in less than a week three Indians came with a letter from this same chief. I will give it verbatim:

"SAN JOSE, NAGARA, February 2.

"DEAR LADY, I have sent my 3 Indians to bring you up to San Blas Coas to My Country. My people like to see you. Dear lady, you can By [buy] A, B, C Book Engles and Bring your Piano [folding organ] up with you no more for Present.

"MR. CHARLES J. ROBINSON.

"And there stood the three Indians waiting to take me in a little canoe over one hundred miles under the tropical sun. Here was an answer to prayer! I started as soon as possible, but the wind turned contrary, and I waited for two weeks longer, and finally went on a trader's schooner. We were awakened by daybreak by a voice, saying: 'Is the Missi are?' and the captain said: 'Yes,' and I said, 'Oh, si, señor; yo estoy aqui' (Oh, yes, sir; I am here). He said, 'The chief has sent us to bring you up at once.' So I got into the canoe and we sailed for six hours. As we neared the island they blew a large shell to notify the people I was coming. The people stood on the shore and greeted me with horns and 'howdo's.' I was met by the chief and for a few hours was on exhibition as it were; then dined with the chief, and was shown over the island, a crowd following us. I was then taken to my grass house. I have neither doors nor windows; the earth is my floor, bamboo sticks my walls and a partition separates my bedroom from the larger room used as schoolroom. I keep school ten hours a day, and the children are making rapid progress. I also have service three times Sunday: Sunday school morning and afternoon, and service at night. Two chiefs from other islands have visited the school and say they want a teacher. I told them I would write some of my friends who loved Jesus and would come and teach them.

"Now the people will not let me leave the village. 'No,' they say, 'Miss Coope, you must die with us.' I am willing to live and die with them. I love them dearly, and we are happy. My desire is that they may understand that Jesus loves them, believe in him and be saved. I ask your prayers that these people believe the Gospel. ANNIE COOPE."

"PAULINE," the cover of this issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, is the work of Miss Helen M. Turner, one of the most interesting modern woman portrait painters. Miss Turner is a Southerner by birth, her home being in New Orleans, which she left some fifteen years ago to come to New York to study under Mr. Kenyon Cox.

As regards this fine example of her work which we have reproduced, Miss Turner writes us that "Pauline" was a little pupil of hers whom she prevailed upon to pose for her, being attracted by the child's exceeding beauty and unusual mentality. Says Miss Turner: "I scarcely hoped to make a success of the picture on account of the subtility of my subject. I arranged the surroundings of the portrait, hoping to help, in this way, to portray her joyous, sunny nature, and for this reason, too, I painted it all in a high, sunny and golden key. The birds and the flowers and the sunshine and joy and happiness are what she loves. I feel I must have succeeded in getting something of all this into my picture, as it has appealed to every one. It was one of the first pictures sold at the Pennsylvania Academy."

An interesting fact is that Miss Turner does not know the name of the purchaser of her picture. One of the rules of the Pennsylvania Academy is that they do not divulge the names of the purchasers who buy work there exhibited.

IOW GOD APPOINTS AND HELPS*

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON BY DR. AND MRS. WILBUR F. CRAFTS

MOSES led the flock to the back of the wilderness," verse 1. "It was a silent and lonely region beyond the nearer branch of the Red Sea—a district extremely desolate and solemn—lofty mountains ısing their sharp ribs and bald summits far into the sky; d where, if his bag of dates and water sack were not ent, the pilgrim might pass many days without ever countering the 'human face divine'; seldom a living eature to be seen except the lizard looking timidly from der the stone, or a coney as timid venturing forth for a rtive nibble in the cool of the day; seldom a sound to be ard, except the murmur of the bee among the acacia ɔssoms, or the tinkle of the sand as it slid tunefully down e slopes of the granite—the desert's musical hour-glass— oratory vast and tranquil and unprofaned."—James ımilton, D.D.

"The angel of Jehovah appeared unto him in a flame of e out of the midst of a bush." The fire differed from any e Moses had before seen; it glowed with exceeding ightness, but it was not a consuming fire. As Moses atched it, he marveled that the bush was not burned up, ıd he came near to investigate. His wonder grew, for the e became vocal and spoke words which he understood, en called him by his name, "Moses, Moses."

"The place whereon thou standest is holy ground." It as "holy" because God was there speaking to him, and hat Moses saw was not fire, but the glory of God, as it as afterwards seen in the "Shekinah," a pillar of fire by ight for the guidance of God's chosen people to the prom- ed land.

"I am the God of thy father, the God of Abraham, the od of Isaac and the God of Jacob." It was the first time loses had heard the divine Voice, and he was overpowered, nd hid his face. We can not wonder at this, for we have ossibly sometimes been abashed in the company of some erson of great distinction.

"I have surely seen the affliction of my people, . . . nd I am come down to deliver them." God did not stop alking because Moses was abashed. It would be most in- eresting to read the whole life of Moses for the sole pur- ɔose of discovering how many times God talked with him .fter this, and under what conditions. Read Ex. 19, 20, 24, :4, 40. "And the Lord spake unto Moses." We find these vords recurring in many chapters not named here.

"I will send thee unto Pharaoh, that thou mayest bring 'orth my people, the children of Israel, out of Egypt." Moses staggered under the great commission, saying: "Who ım I that I should go?" etc. Then God tried to encourage ıim by saying: "Certainly I will go with thee." Then Moses asked God that he would give him some sign that he ɔould show the people that of a truth God had sent him. Read in Ex. 4 what was the sign given by God to Moses. Moses still urged his incompetency, saying: "I am slow of speech, and of a slow tongue." Read God's reply to this in Ex. 4: 10-12. At length God upbraided Moses for his lack of courage and faith, and named his brother Aaron as one who should go with him and be to him "instead of a mouth." (Ex. 4: 14-16.) Thus ended that wonderful bush meeting. Moses gathered his flock and returned to his family at the house of Reuel, his father-in-law, and formed a caravan of asses, taking with him his wife and his two sons, and returned to Egypt after forty years' sojourn in Midian. He had the assurance from God before starting back, "All the men are dead which sought thy life."

What a memory was that burning bush to Moses! The brightness of it remained until his dying day, for when he took his last leave of the people of Israel he craved for them the blessing of "Him that dwelt in the bush." (Deut. 33: 16.)

There are two strong Bible parallels to the call of Moses from the burning bush. One of them is the call of Isaiah (chapter 6), who hears the voice of God from the blazing glory of the heavens, saying: "Whom shall I send, and who will go for us?" Isaiah, like Moses, felt his unfitness in the blaze of divine purity, and exclaimed: "Woe is me, for I am a man of unclean lips." But when those lips had been purged by the live coals from off the altar, Isaiah said: "Lord, here am I, send me."

Another close parallel to Moses' call was that of Saul of Tarsus, who at the gate of Damascus suddenly beheld in the sky the glorious form of the risen Christ standing sentinel over the little church he had come to destroy, and heard the divine call to become a missionary of the Cross. There was a great struggle in his soul, but he "was not disobedient to the heavenly vision."

Not miraculously like Moses, Isaiah and Paul are most of us called, but more like Peter, James and John, to whom Jesus said only, "Follow me." The calls of several of them came through other Christians—Peter's through Andrew, Nathanael's through Philip, as our calls to service mostly come through parent or pastor. During a season of revival, a man was praying for an unconverted neighbor, that he might be "touched with the finger of God." Something seemed to say, "Thou art the finger of God; hast thou touched thy neighbor? Hast thou ever in all these years spoken to him of God?" He arose from his knees to bear to him the call of God.

There are some people who express great regret that they have done so little with their lives. Some of them are modest, and do not wish to claim too much for themselves; others, in fact, have done little, because they have been waiting on opportunity. That is a trick of the evil one, even Satan, to keep people from doing all the good in the world they might. No lack of opportunity will be found if we just get busy in doing good to those around us, in our home, in our church, in the town or city where we live, anywhere, everywhere.

A lady once saw in a London daily paper a call for Christian workers in a very bad part of the city. She determined to report at the office named. She declared herself ready for service, stating that she was not afraid to go anywhere, that she could work among foreigners if needed, as she was able to speak several languages. "You are just the person we have been wishing for," was the response to her offer. She was invited to go with the workers to a tea to be given in a chapel to poor downfallen creatures. She was seated at a table with a company of girls, who snatched the food as it was passed. The lady kindly spoke to them about gentle manners, and assured them that there was plenty for all. During the tea she asked the girls for their names and addresses. They all came from one quarter. She told them that on the next day she would be down to visit them. She dressed herself in her accustomed manner, wearing a beautiful satin cloak and a gold chain. When the policeman saw her, he essayed to accompany her, "for," said he, "it is a dangerous place." She declined his kind services, saying: "I am not afraid to go anywhere." So she passed through an archway or gate into the close, and there the girls came around her, both delighted and surprised to see her. She told them she had decided to have a social at least twice a week in the chapel, and if they would come, she would teach them to sew, and read beautiful stories to them, and give them books to carry home to read. They all said they would come, and they did. She purchased ten dollars' worth of books, many of them with beautiful bindings. She was advised to cover them with cloth, so they would not get soiled. "No," she replied, "the beauty of the bindings will be greatly enjoyed by them, and will do much to make them keep their hands clean, more than any advice I might give." It worked just as she thought it would, for at the end of three months, though in constant use, the books showed very little soil excepting what would necessarily come from constant use. The good that was done in those social hours by the lady wearing the satin cloak and the gold chain can never be estimated in this world, and she has never ceased to regret that her work for those particular girls stopped, because she left London for her home across the sea. It is hoped that this incident may cause others to look in daily papers or in conditions by which they are surrounded to find a work waiting for them to do. The case of Moses should be a warning against an overplus of self-depreciation, which is a bar to one's usefulness. Also we should be impressed with God's willingness to sustain us in any matter undertaken in his name.

The pure in heart shall see God. We shall see him face to face in the beyond, but before that time it is our privilege to see him thought to thought, to be so attuned to God that we can truly know him, and that is to see him, not with the eyes of the body, but with the eyes of the soul.

* THE INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON for July 20, 1913. Moses Called to Deliver Israel. Ex. 3: 1 to 4: 20. GOLDEN TEXT: "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God." Matt. 5: 8.

OUR SUNDAY SCHOOL SUPERINTENDENTS' ROUND TABLE

—"WHAT IS A GOOD method to use a banner in the Sunday school? We have been giving it to the class having perfect attendance for a month. Thus far this plan has not been satisfactory, and I thought you might have some good suggestions to offer."—Mary H. Walton.

A beautiful banner is among the desirable assets of a Sunday school. In a parade the scholars like to march under their own banner; on Children's Day they like to follow it as they march into the church; they are happy to take it along when they go on the annual picnic. On all of these occasions it identifies them as belonging to something worth while. A very nice banner can be purchased for $10 and one can be "home-made" for half of that. In addition to the occasions named, the Sunday school banner can be made of practical use in improving the quality of the school. Let "a standard of excellence" be determined upon by the Sunday school board or committee, which should cover the following points:

1. Promptness—to be present at least five minutes (ten minutes would be better) before the opening of the school, in order to adjust books, etc., and have a little friendly visiting. Just on time for the opening of the school is really to be behind time.

2. A second point of excellence should be no absentees. In order to win this point a whole class has been known to "go for a boy who was missing, and bring him along."

3. A third point of excellence should be: "Every scholar having his own Bible in hand." Lesson leaves and quarterlies are very convenient, but by the exclusive use of such material scholars fail to get training in handling the Bible by becoming accustomed to turn easily to passages named by teachers.

4. A fourth point of excellence should be "an offering from every scholar present." Stress should be laid upon regular giving rather than on the largeness of gifts; that will take care of itself if the scholars are trained to be regular givers.

Probably the Sunday school board might determine upon other points of excellence suited to the peculiar conditions of their school.

All classes should enter into competition for it, and whenever a class can report all points fulfilled, let the banner be set on a standard in the midst of that class. This may be done every Sunday, or once a month, or once a quarter, according as agreed upon by the board. If two or more classes are entitled to the banner at any one time, the fact should be announced by the superintendent, and the banner carried from one class to another during the closing exercises of the school.

CHURCH AND STATE

FROM A LUTHERAN STANDPOINT

BY PASTOR D. H. STEFFENS

Concluded

NO MINISTER has ever raised any objection to Maryland's law, which bars him, along with Indians and felons, from membership in the State legislature, for no minister has yet evinced any desire to be a member of that body. Still, it is rather difficult to understand why, if we knew how to separate church and state, he should be placed upon a level with an Indian and a felon and forbidden to exercise the right of representing those of his fellow citizens who may desire to send him to the House of Delegates.

Then there is the school question. Shall the members of those church bodies which maintain their own schools be exempted from the payment of taxes levied by the state for the support of its schools, which are open to all children of the entire citizen body? Or shall such church schools be subsidized by the state in proportion to the number of their pupils who are being educated for their future duties of citizenship without direct expense to the commonwealth? Shall the state, which depends for its continued existence upon the possession of an intelligent electorate, exercise any supervision over the curriculum and management of such church schools? That it has the right to watch over them in the interest of public health is quite generally admitted. That it has the right to watch over the training of its future citizens by insisting upon the maintenance of proper educational standards on the part of such schools is just as frequently denied. The question therefore arises: What does this principle of complete separation of church and state demand of us with respect to this matter?

The justice of taxing church property, especially when not directly used for public worship, hut as a source of revenue for religious corporations, is another instance of our failure to consistently apply this principle. The limitation of the amount of capital which may be owned by a religious corporation, together with the manner in which such capital and property may he held, invested, administered, bequeathed and transferred, is by no means clearly defined, although it comes before our courts whenever some little Polish congregation desires to repudiate the jurisdiction of some Irish bishop of the Church of Rome. At this moment the legislature of Pennsylvania is being urged to enact legislation legalizing the peculiar mode of property tenure which ohtains in that church, which for reasons sufficient to itself insists that all property titles in a given diocese be vested in its bishop. Strange to say, no one seems to feel that this system of property tenure makes possible, not merely a most potent moral suasion, but a form of positive religious tyranny incompatible with free institutions.

The right of the state to appropriate public funds for private and ecclesiastic charities, reformatories and institutions of learning is constitutionally prohibited in Missouri and Michigan. In most other States this dangerous practice has by long tolerance become so firmly entrenched that it is claimed as a right by many religious corporations. The refusal of the Roman archbishop of New York to permit the comptroller of that city to audit the accounts of those institutions which regularly receive large sums from the public treasury is a case in point. In Maryland the State makes some effort through its Board of Charities and Corrections, together with perfunctory grand jury visits, to exercise a certain supervision and control over these institutions, which it so lavishly subsidizes. Its activities in this direction have hitherto been so little successful that we, at this moment, are conducting an investigation, evoked by a recent report of the secretary of the State Board of Corrections and Charities indicating that there had for years been a shameful waste of public funds through such legislative appropriations. We may therefore well ask ourselves what a consistent application of the principle of separation of church and state demands of us with respect to this system of subsidizing private and ecclesiastical charities and institutions out of the public treasury. Certain church corporations are more and more organizing industrial activities and entering into open competition with private business. By conducting laundries, managing farms and workshops, in which every advantage of tax exemption and opportunity for the exploitation of cheap labor is utilized to the utmost, even to the employment of the contract labor system which is now being abolished in the prisons and reformatories of every progressive State, coupled with the maintenance of a vigorous system of discipline sufficient to promptly squelch any attempt at self-assertion on the part of their inmates, these institutions are placed in a unique position of advantage over legitimate private or corporate enterprise. They very often plead their religious character as a ground for exemption from ordinary factory supervision, inspection and control, without, however, giving the state any real assurance that such of its citizens as are deprived of their liberties and committed to the charge of ecclesiastical corporations are being properly treated. The state thus not only permits the exploitation of its own citizens by a religious corporation, but by the conferring of special privileges it places this corporation in a position of advantage over other corporations or individual citizens engaged in the same industrial occupations.

Marriage, which the state considers a contract between two of its citizens, should be legalized by the state, even as divorces are now granted by the same power. To delegate the right to legalize such a contract by the performance of an ecclesiastical ceremony to any or all church bodies, especially to a church body which enacts "Ne temere" decrees and sets up the preposterous claim that all citizens not married by one of its ecclesiastics are living in a state of unlawful concubinage, is a grant of power which no state can make without a loss, at least in part, of that power which no state can delegate without building up a state within a state. Here again, we have failed to make any final application of this principle of complete separation of the ecclesiastical and civil powers. The same thing appears when we begin to consider the appointment of chaplains for our army and navy; the prominent part taken by ecclesiastics as ecclesiastics in purely civic functions, and the recognition given to ecclesiastical bodies by state officials attending in their official capacity purely religious gatherings. All of these things plainly indicate that the struggle of centuries for the separation of these two powers has not yet taught us how to apportion and administer the affairs of each in peace.

Nor will this ever be accomplished until the state insists upon placing religious organizations, which it must consider only as corporations, upon a level with all other corporations, granting them full liberty to concern themselves with the spiritual welfare of their adherents, to preach and teach what they conceive to be the truth; depriving them, however, of every privilege which might enable them to further their material interests under the guise of religion; and insisting that they confine their activities to those purposes for which they are organized. Then the state, without interference in things purely spiritual, may grant to the church in its corporate capacitv full protection against any and every injustice or interference with its efforts to care for the spiritual welfare of men.

Having done that, the state has done all that it legitimately can do for the church. To do more or less than that would be to invite a repetition of those unfortunate conditions which, after working almost irreparable injury to both church and state in Europe, again, despite the provisions of the constitution, threaten to disturb the peace of our beloved country.

Unfortunately, this is not clearly seen by our leading men in public life. Mr. Roosevelt certainly did not see it when that delegation of Lutheran ministers called upon him at the White House. If he sees it to-day, he has given no indication of the fact. The same thing must be said of President Woodrow Wilson. If he sees it, he has given no indication of the fact.

Is it then not the duty of every citizen who can see that we have not yet pushed this great foundation principle to its logical conclusion—whether he be Protestant or Romanist, churchman or no church—to so utilize the approaching four hundredth anniversary of that great event which, by the assertion of this truth, liberated the state from the domination of the church, as to bring to the attention of the leaders of social and political thought in America the necessity of a constant reiteration and consistent reapplication of this principle—the full and complete separation of church and state? As we love our country and seek its peace, there can be but one answer to this question.

CUBS' FOOD

They Thrive on Grape-Nuts

Healthy babies don't cry and the well-nurished baby that is fed on Grape-Nuts never a crying baby. Many babies no cannot take any other food relish the rfect food, Grape-Nuts, and get well. "My baby was given up by three ctors who said that the condensed milk which I had fed her had ruined the ild's stomach. One of the doctors told e that the only thing to do would be to Grape-Nuts, so I got some and pre-ared it as follows: I soaked 1½ table-oonfuls in one pint of cold water for alf an hour, then I strained off the liquid nd mixed 12 teaspoonfuls of this strained rape-Nuts juice with six teaspoonfuls rich milk, put in a pinch of salt and a ttle sugar, warmed it and gave it to baby very two hours.

"In this simple, easy way I saved baby's fe and have built her up to a strong, ealthy child, rosy and laughing. The ood must certainly be perfect to have uch a wonderful effect as this. I can uthfully say I think it is the best food n the world to raise delicate babies on, nd is also a delicious healthful food for rown-ups, as we have discovered in our amily."

Grape-Nuts is equally valuable to the trong, healthy man or woman. It stands or the true theory of health. "There's reason," and it is explained in the little ook, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

THE YOUNG PEOPLE'S MEETINGS

NOTES ON THE CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR, EPWORTH LEAGUE AND BAPTIST YOUNG PEOPLE'S UNION TOPICS

Favorite Verses*

A FEW weeks ago we studied some favorite verses from the Psalms; a little later a group of favorite verses in Proverbs. To-day we have a selection from the Prophets, which has long been loved by Christian Bible students. It is one of the many beautiful passages in God's Book that bring comfort to those who have wandered away from their zeal and purity and have become cold in their love.

One of the utterly incomprehensible things about the Bible message is the insistence with which God declares that he is ever ready to forgive and welcome those who have wandered away. People are tempted to think that there are some circumstances which may make such a return impossible. People in this sort of distress often come to pastors or evangelists or write to Christian leaders and workers, asking in despair what is the thing to do in the new and terrible and supposedly hopeless situation in which they find themselves. There is only one answer to be given always to all such people: "O Israel, return unto the Lord thy God; for thou hast fallen by thine iniquity." That is the Bible message. God is patient. He is never tired of loving us. He is ever on the lookout toward the far country, waiting for the wanderer's return. The fifty-first Psalm, the first chapter of Isaiah and the fifteenth chapter of Luke, are among the beautiful and comforting passages which contain the Father's gentle call to those sons who have left his house.

It is a rather terrible thing, though perhaps inevitable in view of the frailty of human nature, that this confidence in God's willingness to forgive has a tendency to make some people careless about wandering. They say: "He is so good and kind that even if I do slip into sin he will take me back." Can anything be more unfair than this, or more cruel? Just because he is so patient and so good and so kind, we ought to love him with a kind of love that will keep us from falling again.

And this is what the rest of this "favorite passage" from the prophets tells about. We are to say to the Lord: "Take away all iniquity and receive us graciously; so will we render the fruit of our lips." The removal of the iniquity and the gracious reception should lead us to use our lips in the praises of God and in testimony to his goodness. And as we appreciate his welcome and train our lips to speak and sing his praises we shall be held back from further wandering.

Verse third is still more hopeful. It shows the soul laying aside its confidence in all other sources of strength than God, and willing to forsake the idols that had lured it from Jehovah. In this verse the refrain occurs again of God's lovingkindness and of his care for those who need him most: "For in thee the fatherless findeth mercy."

"I will heal their backsliding," the Lord mercifully declares. "I will love them freely; for mine anger is turned away." Now follow still more definite and abundant promises for the future. "I will be as the dew unto Israel; he shall grow as the lily and cast forth his roots as Lebanon." This is a promise of nourishment, beauty and strength.

"His branches shall spread, and his beauty shall be as the olive tree, and his smell as Lebanon." Here is the promise that the soul shall grow in power and influence and shall become still more beautiful and fragrant. This idea of attractiveness in the spiritual life is one that should be emphasized far more than it is. There is no other way of bringing others to the Saviour quite so efficient as the way of being beautiful and winsome in one's own soul. "A merry heart doeth good like a medicine," medicine not only for one's self, but for others who are in need of healing.

By this time the soul is so happy in its communion with God that it cannot understand how the false gods could ever have had any charms. "Ephraim shall say, What have I to do any more with idols?" Then the Lord states again the fact of his interest in the wanderer and his observation of him during his wandering. That is the feeling of every one who returns: That God's eye has been upon him, that his hand has been touching him and that it was his love that won him back. So it is God who shall make his new life fruitful: "From me is thy fruit found." Compare this verse with the words of Jesus in John 15: 16: "Ye have not chosen me, but I have chosen you, and ordained you, that ye should go and bring forth fruit, and that your fruit should remain."

Hidden Springs*

THERE are few more interesting studies than psychology. It is interesting to observe and study faces. It is interesting to study anatomy, but it is more intensely interesting to try to understand not only the face and the form of human beings, but their very souls. Psychology is really more interesting than mere history, or rather history is more interesting when approached from the standpoint of psychology. For instance, the motives of individual acts or of broad human movements are more interesting than the acts and movements themselves.

So our lesson goes down to those deep places in the soul. Why do we do what we do? Why are we trying to be good? Why are we trying to make sacrifices and do service for the church? What are, indeed, "the hidden springs" of our life?

In the Scripture passages assigned for our study this week the true, adequate and satisfactory motive for holy living and earnest service is given. Jesus told the woman at the well that he would give to the soul "living water" which would not only satisfy the soul's own thirst, but would "be in him a well of water springing up unto everlasting life." The same statement was made again in John 7: 37-39, and here the evangelist explains particularly that it is the Holy Spirit coming into the soul which gives this hidden power. Out of our hearts may flow "rivers of living water" to bless and heal and strengthen the souls of others.

The passage from Isaiah has some beautiful words: Salvation, strength, song, joy. And the same explanation is given of the deep joy and the real power of the consecrated heart as appears in the chapters from John: "For great is the Holy One of Israel in the midst of thee."

While the word "love" does not actually occur in any of the passages studied to-day, it is the only word that really explains and characterizes the hidden springs. The living water with which the Holy Spirit will fill the soul is love. "The love of God is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Spirit which is given unto us." It is hard to love God without the helping, sanctifying power of the Holy Ghost. Love is one of the "fruits of the Spirit." "Love is the fulfilling of the law." To have the deep and hidden places of the soul thrilled and filled with constant, buoyant, irresistible love is to have within one's nature the hidden springs that make life fruitful.

Abraham Lincoln Said—

as he stood before the great gathering at Washington on March 4, 1861—just a moment before he took the oath of office: "We are not enemies, but friends. We must not be enemies. Though passion may have strained, it must not break our bonds of affection. The mystic chords of memory, stretching from every battlefield and patriot grave to every living heart and hearthstone all over this broad land, will yet swell the chorus of the Union, when again touched, as surely they will be, by the better angels of our nature."

LINCOLN loved peace. It was the very symbol of his own godly nature. And when, following closely upon his inauguration to the presidency of the United States, the country hurled itself into the throes of an awful civil strife, his great heart bowed down in sorrow at the horrors of our national tragedy. More, perhaps, than any other person of his time, did he feel the unutterable woe of that war, because of his greater love of peace and his deeper feeling for the human kind.

A Prophecy Fulfilled

It was, therefore, most fit, most prophetic of the day when his oft spoken messages of peace should be borne home again to the American people, that Lincoln himself delegated the famous war photographer, Mathew B. Brady, to his gigantic task: the task of photographing the Civil War. That Brady fulfilled his mission most worthily is attested by his marvelous collection of negatives, the property of the United States Government, which were secured at the constant risk of his life through the four long, weary years of that struggle. Such patience, such privation and forbearance as the labor entailed, were bound to bear their fruit. And so to-day, after half a century has come between us and those awful days, the Brady collection and the Lincoln message of peace drive home with cumulative emphasis the greatest moral that the Civil War can teach the present generation: that war is the strongest argument and the most compelling plea for world-wide peace.

The tragedy of a great war is not confined to the deaths of those who fell on the field. There is a greater tragedy in the grief of those who are left behind to fight the battle of life alone. Many tragedies begun with the death of loved ones in the Civil War are even yet being enacted in thousands of American homes, and the lasting grief of the wife who lost her husband, the sister who lost her brother, the mother who lost her son, is one of the strongest arguments against war that can be brought to the attention of the younger generation. War, where the smartly-dressed youth of the town march gaily away to the music of the band, "saviors of their country," is one thing to contemplate; war in the field, when the uniforms are in tatters, when the march has become a stumbling, staggering advance and the music of the band is replaced by the scream of shells, the heartsickening groans of the wounded, the sobbing choke of the dying, is another matter.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN

The great Peace Advocate, as photographed in 1863 by the man whose famous pictures of the Civil War illustrate to-day the eloquent messages spoken by this great American 50 years ago. This is one of the 1,576 Brady Photographs which are included in Lossing's vivid history of the Civil War.

IN LOSSING'S great history and the 1,576 Brady photographs of battle scenes and horrors is vividly depicted the war that Lincoln abhorred; the kind of war which this monumental work will bring forcibly to the attention of the old and the young; the war that left behind it more unhappiness and grief than any other single event or series of events that ever happened in the history of this country; the war whose grave responsibilities, perils, horrors, should be implanted so forcibly in the minds of the young as to cause them to resolve that with their help it will never take place again. No one can read this book or see these pictures without arriving at the firm conviction that war should be avoided at any cost.

Genius of Brady and Lossing

Mathew B. Brady, who, upon the belated publication of his marvelous collection, leaped to fame as the world's greatest war photographer, did more than any other man to visualize the Civil War. Though he worked in the days of "wet plate" photography, under stupendous handicaps scarcely realizable in this era of modern photographic appliances, Brady's pictures compare favorably with the best. His vivid camp and battle scenes of fifty years ago are now a monument to him and to the cause of peace. For, like "the better angels of our nature," they touch, as never before since that bitter struggle, those "mystic chords of memory" that stretch "from every battlefield and patriot grave to every living heart and hearthstone."

Dr. Benson J. Lossing, LL.D.—the author of A History of the Civil War, 1861-65—is too well known as an historian to require exposition here. It is quite enough to know that, in the words of Brander Matthews, "he was the most conscientious and thorough writer of history this country has ever produced."

The entire work is printed on fine enamel paper in large and clear type, made especially for this purpose. The engravings are made direct from the original Brady photographs by the best engravers to be had. The volume is profusely illustrated, scarcely a single one of the 512 pages being without one or more Brady photos. Published in magnificent and permanent style, with rich, red cloth binding, gold embossed; size, 9x12 inches; weight, 6 pounds, or as much as any ordinary six-volume set of books. It is a great National work for Americans, and should be in every home.

Questions and Answers

Mrs. E. V., Sidney, B. C. A minister whom I heard recently said the war in the Balkans is the war of Armageddon. I can readily see how some of the nations might be drawn into this conflict; but do not all the nations of the world take part in the Armageddon war? How about China and Africa?

With the best intentions in the world, many worthy preachers have come to grief in their efforts to set times and fix dates for the culmination of Bible prophecies. Armageddon is to be the last great battlefield, on which all the forces of Antichrist are to be overthrown. China and Africa may be won for Christ before then.

J. D., Clarkstown, Wash. The passage in Rev. 11: 15 has its parallel in Dan. 2: 44. It is the visible setting up of heaven's sovereignty over the earth—that sovereignty which was rejected before by the world's rulers. This done, the distinction of the worldly and the spiritual shall cease. The whole earth, with all of its affairs, will at once be worldly and Christian, but worldly in the transformed sense, all being ordered in accordance with the divine will and in perfect recognition of and obedience to God's laws. But it should not be forgotten that the kingdom has its first beginnings in the hearts of God's true children here and now. This is repeatedly emphasized by Jesus in his talks with his disciples. These beginnings, though only a faint foreshadowing of the ultimate development of the kingdom, are nevertheless real and their earnest cultivation is a duty laid upon all believers. Christ ushered in the kingdom; his followers, like a little faithful flock, maintain it perseveringly and we look forward to the day, in the fulness of time, when it shall be proclaimed in divine majesty and power over the whole earth.

W. L. M. Who is referred to in Rev. 20: 11?

The Father, represented by the Son, to whom he has committed all judgment, and before whose judgment seat all must stand. The verses that follow describe the Last Judgment.

H. H., Chambersburg, Pa. The passage in John 20: 17 has been much discussed. The meaning would seem to be that Mary, probably unconscious of the impulse which governed her at the moment, would have grasped Him, while he, deeming the former worship and homage inappropriate, gently rebuked her and told her to go and spread the news of his resurrection among the brethren.

Reader, Svea, Minn. Paul, at the time of Stephen's martyrdom, was more than a mere spectator; he was an active assistant. There is nothing in the Scripture to show that before his miraculous conversion, he had shown or expressed regret at his participation in Stephen's death. On the contrary, he had become, and was, up to the moment when he was stricken down, one of the bitterest and most relentless persecutors of the Christians (see Acts 26: 10, 12). What he may have thought, in his own heart at times, of his share in the tragedy, or what influence it may have had upon him, can only be a matter of surmise. There was nothing to outwardly reveal that he brooded over it or that he repented at all, before his own transformation.

J. L. P., Sheridan, Mich. Gal. 3: 16 is an explanatory verse interpolated in the chapter. The covenant promise was not made to Abraham alone, but to him and his seed, which means Christ; to the literal Israel and also to the spiritual Israel. The complete fulfilment of the covenant awaited the coming of Christ, the seed, concerning whom it was made. "Promises" is held to refer to the same promise, oft repeated. The "beast" referred to in Rev. 13 was lately discussed in THE MAIL-BAG.

E. D. H., Mount Victory, Ky. How do children who die before reaching the age of responsibility get into the kingdom? They are innocent of sin, yet guilty according to God's Word. What hope have they apart from God's love for mankind in these children?

In the passage in Rom. 5: 18 the sin of Adam and the merits of Christ are pronounced as coextensive; the words in both cases are practically identical. "Judgment came upon all men" and "the free gift came upon all men." If the whole human race be included in the condemnation for original sin, then the whole race must also be included in the justification through Christ's sacrifice. Children dying in infancy, before the age of understanding or moral responsibility, are all partakers of this inclusive justification. Were it otherwise, a very large proportion of the human race would have no share in this "free gift," but would be condemned for sin, which they never committed, which is contrary to the divine characteristics of love and justice, contrary to the apostolic teachings, and contrary to the spirit and language of the Master himself, who said of the innocent children: "Of such is the kingdom of heaven." This is the general attitude of theology to-day on this matter. Faith always presupposes knowledge and power to exercise it, and as a little child has neither, it has no moral responsibility. Even so stern a theologian as Calvin held practically this view. Any other conception of God would make him a Moloch instead of a loving Father.

Mrs. A. H. S., Cortland, N. Y. 1. The scarlet thread mentioned in Gen. 38: 28-30 was used to mark the one to whom the rights of primogeniture would belong. These rights, however, seem to have been given to Pharez. These details probably would not have been in the inspired record had it not been to show the full links connecting the genealogy. 2. The word "Gentile" means "a people" or "flowing together," and was originally used in a general sense of any nation. Later, it was applied to other nations than the Jews. Japheth in Gen. 10: 2 is called the progenitor of the tribes of Western Europe and Northern Asia (including the Armenians, Grecks, Thracians, etc.).

I. R. S., Solon, Ind. Entertainments of the class you describe are wholly out of place in connection with the church, and would be regarded as in doubtful taste anywhere. To increase the church's finances by a comic marriage is a travesty of a sacred ordinance, and if it be as you represent it we are surprised that any church would countenance it. If it be merely a rehearsal by friends and principals in advance of the actual ceremony that is another matter and not uncommon. There are many methods adopted nowadays to help churches financially, and it must be admitted that a church which depends too much on such expedients, instead of working along legitimate lines, invariably does so at a sacrifice of its spiritual strength.

H. C. B., Jamestown, Mo. Please explain John 21: 20-22. Does it mean that John should stay until Christ came back?

John alone of all the disciples survived the destruction of Jerusalem and so witnessed the beginning of that series of events which belong to what are known as the "last days" of that particular age. He may thus be said to have witnessed the foundation of the kingdom in men's hearts, in a greater measure than any of his associates. The language of Jesus (in verse 22) was not a prediction, but a question, in which there was an assertion of his divine power to dispose of human life as he willed; but it has been made the basis of a tradition which treats it mistakenly as a prophecy.

Mrs. A. E. B., Portsmouth, Ohio. 1. The "enduement with power" came at Pentecost. 2. According to the traditions preserved by the early church, the apostles met death in various ways. Matthew was martyred in Ethiopia; Mark in Alexandria, Egypt; Luke was hanged on an olive tree in Greece; John, after many perils, died a natural death in Ephesus; Peter was crucified in Rome, head downwards; James the Great beheaded at Jerusalem; James the Less beaten to death with a fuller's club in the temple grounds; Philip hanged at Hieropolis; Bartholomew flayed alive; Thomas slain with a lance at Coromandel; Jude killed with arrows; Simeon crucified in Persia; Andrew crucified; Matthias stoned and beheaded; Barnabas stoned to death by Jews at Salamis; Paul beheaded at Rome under Nero.

A. P., Milan, N. H. Does the Bible anywhere refer to the "Dark Ages"? The Jews suffered so much that I thought that time might be referred to somewhere.

The "Dark Ages," so-called, were from the death of Charlemagne (A.D. 814) to the close of the Carlovingian dynasty (987 A.D.), long after the Bible canon was closed.

C. S., Auncondn, Mont. In Mark 9: 49 the interpretation of the verse is substantially as though Jesus had said: "Every disciple of mine shall have a fiery trial to undergo, and every one who would be found acceptable and well-pleasing to God, must have such a salting" (like the Levitical sacrifices). The passage has been much discussed, and some commentators hold that the last clause ("every sacrifice shall be salted with salt") is an interpolation.

J. R., Salt Lake City, Utah. From whom were the Hittites descended?

Their ancestor was Heth, of the family of Canaan (see Gen. 10). In the time of Moses, they were apparently a small tribe of Palestine, feebler than the Amorites. In the days of the Judges they had grown to considerable tribal importance and in Elisha's time they had become a strong people, allied with Egypt in their wars, and owning a confederacy of cities, spreading far beyond the borders of Palestine. About 1600 B.C., they were a vast warlike power, contending with Egypt and holding wide possessions. They were then a handsome, warlike race, yellow-skinned, long-haired, bearded and with the Mongolian rather than the Semitic type of face. For centuries they fought with Assyria, and their power was finally brought to a close by the successful campaigns of King Sargon (717 B.C.). Their kingdom ceased to exist shortly afterward.

E. S., New Brunswick, N. J. Jesus' answer to the appeal of the penitent thief on the cross "gave him what he needed most—the assurance of rest and peace. The word 'paradise' meant to him repose and shelter, the greatest contrast possible to the thirst and agony and shame of the hours upon the cross." Paul speaks of degrees of heavenly exaltation (II Cor. 12: 2), and the religious teaching of the Jews of that day taught this. The promise spoken by the Saviour, however we may interpret it, conveyed to the penitent the assurance that his future place would be one best fitted for him, and beyond this it is useless to speculate.

B. M. H., Escondido, Calif. The census returns cannot be successfully disputed. What is needed is a uniform divorce law.

N. O. C., Islip, L. I. John 3: 14-21 are the concluding words of Jesus to Nicodemus, being an answer to his question. (See v. 9.)

W. J. B., Aurora, Ind. James the apostle was the son of Alphæus. He was called "James the Less."

J. W. R., Santa Barbara, Calif. Your statements are correct, but the great difficulty lies in the fact that the traffic produces a very large part of the government's revenue.

R. T. W., Greenville, S. C. Armageddon is the mountain of Megiddo (in the Jordan Valley). In the symbolical language of prophecy, however, it is held by some to mean "mountain of destruction," and by others, "mountain of the Gospel."

D. R. F., Thomastown, Ga. You have touched on one of the disputed points of Genesis, on which no one can speak conclusively, viz., the length of time between the creation of Adam and Eve. This is a case where theorizing is futile, and where traditions (such as some found in Jewish literature) do not avail.

L. L. S., Back Bay, Va. Matt. 12: 31, 32 refers to the "unpardonable sin," which commentators believe to have been sinning deliberately against the light by attributing the Holy Spirit's power, as manifested in the miracles of Jesus, to Satanic agency. The subject has been much discussed and there are different views as to its interpretation.

M. F., Oak Harbor, Wash. Matt. 16: 19, 18: 18 all relate (as has been repeatedly explained in THE MAIL-BAG) to the powers which Jesus, when foreshadowing his own death, promised to confer upon his disciples, and which were fully confirmed by subsequent events. There was no distinction, all being equal sharers in this supernatural endowment, as see John 20: 23.

A. E. H., Olean, N. Y. In Rev. 7 the omission of the tribe of Dan among the "number of the sealed" is notable. Joseph was substituted for Dan because, according to Scripture, there was to be a Judas among the twelve tribes and Antichrist was either to come from Dan or that tribe was to be his tool. Besides, Dan was the first to lapse into idolatry. In the ultimate reckoning Dan's small numbers are joined to Naphtali's.

NEW ROCHELLE COMMEMORATES THE HUGUENOTS

Photographs Copyrighted by The International News Service

THE ARRIVAL OF THE SHIP BEARING THE HUGUENOTS

FOR the last week of June the city of New Rochelle, N. Y., gave itself over to a jolly-souled celebration of the two hundred and twenty-fifth anniversary of the landing of the Huguenots. Two delegates from the mother city, old La Rochelle, France, came to bring the greetings and the good wishes of their fellow citizens to the American city with which they share a common heritage. The two Frenchmen, MM. Harry Chatonet and Charles Garrigues, brought, too, a gift from La Rochelle, the blue and red silk standard of Jean Guiton, the city's gallant Huguenot defender, and an iron culverin used during the siege of 1628. On the carriage that supports the culverin this inscription has been placed:

"The old city of Rochelle to the City of New Rochelle—a memorial of the siege of 1628—June, 1913."

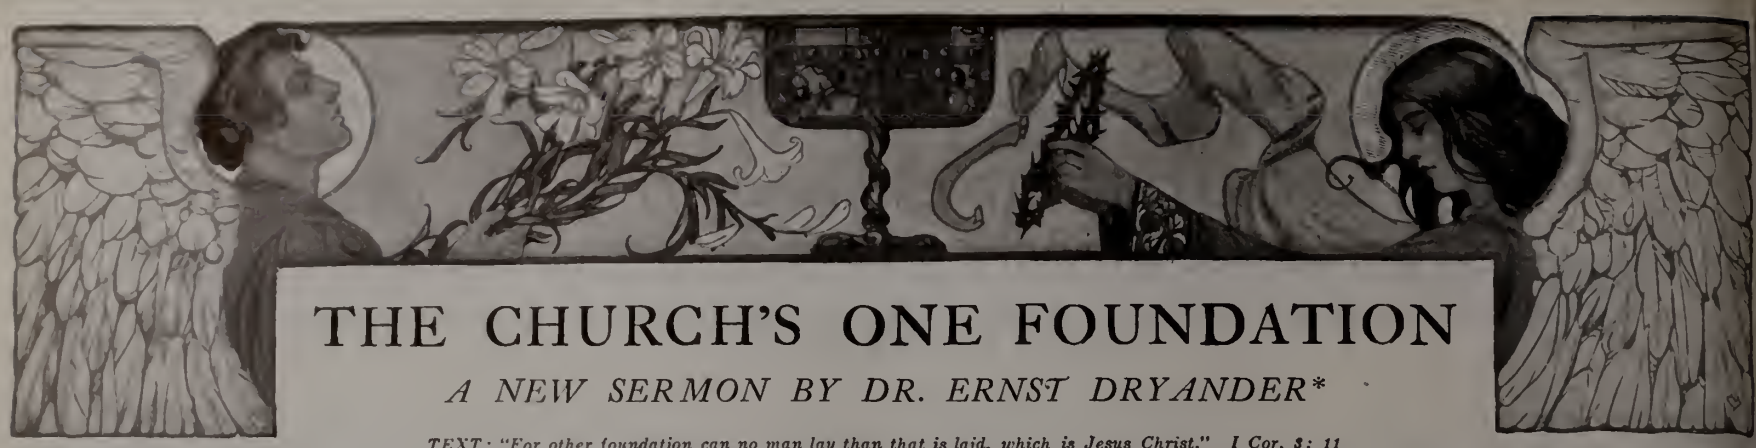
In churches made gay with the intertwined colors of France and the United States, special services inaugurated the celebration. The official service of the morning of Sunday, June 22, was held in the First Presbyterian Church, and attended by the Huguenot Association in a body. Rev. George Reynolds, D.D., chose as the subject for his sermon, "A Chapter in the History of Religious Liberty." He recounted the history of these sturdy French Protestants from their departure from France to their establishment on American soil. In the evening a union service was held in St. John's Methodist Episcopal Church, and Rev. W. W. Duncan spoke on "The Heritage of New Rochelle in the Huguenots."

On Monday the French visitors were escorted from New York by Sir Charles Pryer, secretary, and Thomas Le Boutillier of the Huguenot Association. Accompanied by the reception committee, who met them at the station, they were received by Mayor Frederick H. Waldorf. After luncheon the visitors viewed the town from automobiles and planted a linden tree near the Huguenot Monument. In the evening there was a reception at the New Rochelle High School. The following day the pageant parade of the celebration took place. The French ambassador, M. Jean J. Jusserand, Consul General Lanel and the two delegates from La Rochelle reviewed the parade with the mayor of the city and a number of other distinguished guests. Detachments of United States regular infantry, battalions of National Guard and batteries of light artillery, naval militia and Spanish War Veterans made up the first division of the parade. The second was composed entirely of firemen, and practically every town in Westchester County was represented. The civic division was led by an historic float of the Huguenot Association, representing the landing of their forefathers at Bonnefoi Point. This was one of the most artistic floats that any parade could hope for or obtain. It was followed by a representation of Governor Leisler, the first governor of New Rochelle, surrounded by a bodyguard of Huguenots armed with pikes and blunderbusses. After a group of woman suffragists came the division representing the commercial houses of the city and the civic departments.

On Wednesday a statue of Governor Leisler was unveiled at Huguenot Park. Members of the Huguenot Association from many parts of America were present for these exercises. The bronze statue, which is nine feet tall and stands on a five-foot granite base, is the work of Solon H. Borglum, one of America's best known sculptors. After a procession to the monument the friends and members of the association took their places on specially erected stands, and the Rev. Dr. Carnody recited the ancient form of the "Bidding Prayer," which called on all of good intent to draw near and enter in the spirit of righteousness into what was about to take place. When a number of short addresses, one of which was delivered by Professor Robert Livingston Schuyler of Columbia University, a lineal descendant of Governor Leisler, had been made, the monument was unveiled by Mrs. Montgomery Schuyler. When the flags had fallen, all present rose and sang "The Star-spangled Banner." The ceremony closed with a benediction by the Rev. Robert Bruce Clark, State chaplain of the Daughters of the American Revolution. The following day the celebration presented the peculiar spectacle of a reception in honor of the Huguenots, whose chief claim to historic fame was their uncompromising Protestantism, given on the grounds of a member of the Roman Catholic Church, and at which special tribute to the broadly tolerant American spirit was paid by another member of the same denomination. W. Bourke Cockran was the speaker, and the reception was held on the grounds of Justice Martin J. Keogh. Mr. Cockran, in referring to the Huguenots in America, declared it the conviction of all Americans that they have been among the most potent factors in the establishment of American institutions. He sketched the history of their oppression during the sixteenth century with the final grant of religious liberty under Henry of Navarre's famous Edict of Nantes. The American spirit of to-day," he said, "is this Edict of Nantes, with its toleration in actual operation, or rather with its spirit in effect. It is that spirit which is exemplified in this celebration. Every one recognizes now that the basis of all laws should be the Sermon on the Mount, and that it is not the function of the state to support the church, but it is the function of the church to support the state."

President John H. Finley of the College of the City of New York contrasted the intolerant age which drove the Huguenots into exile with the present era of religious toleration and good-will. He said in the course of his address: "We are living in a Carnegian age. I often wonder if we are not too tolerant of one another; if we ought not to be a little more dogmatic and carry chips around on our shoulders or brandish a shillalah after the manner of our Irish brethren."

The last day of the celebration was given over to water sports and a water pageant. Thousands of boats of all sizes and descriptions gathered on the waters at Hudson Park, while upwards of fifteen thousand persons assembled along the shore to watch the historic events of the landing of the Huguenots re-enacted. Secretary Daniels of the Navy watched the pageant from the United States despatch boat Dolphin, which was escorted by the gunboat Wasp and the torpedo boats Paulding and Jarvis. A replica of the vessel which brought the Huguenots from La Rochelle came round the point bearing her cargo of modern Huguenots, dressed in the brilliant costumes of their historic immigrant ancestors. The young men who were impersonating Indians raced out to meet the little ship.



THE CHURCH'S ONE FOUNDATION

*A NEW SERMON BY DR. ERNST DRYANDER

TEXT: "For other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ." I Cor. 3: 11

PAUL, when he wrote these words, found himself in a difficult position. As always happens in times of great religious excitement, divisions and party strife had arisen in the Christan communities. Some one of the household of Chloe—evidently a highly respected member of the church—had kept Paul fully informed of prevailing conditions and tendencies. Matters had gone so far that the names of the apostles were being used as party cries. I am of Paul, I of Apollos, I of Cephas—such were the cries, and thereby the individual differences of view in apprehending and interpreting the Gospel were being turned into opposing partisanships, the party of Paul, the party of Peter, the party of Apollos, and the divisions were becoming very acute. Besides, some Jewish converts, who had known Christ after the flesh, had come from Jerusalem to Corinth and called themselves—in contradistinction to the disciples of Peter and Paul—simply Christians or disciples of Christ. We may be sure that they did this not without some claim to superiority over the other members of the church. In circumstances like these Paul could not refrain from defining his attitude to the questions that caused such controversies in the infant church.

Of What Shall Ye Build?

Our text is taken from Paul's discussion of the questions brought to his notice. He treats of the limits to which divergent views and opinions may extend. Should I put it in modern language I might say he discusses the problem of freedom of thought in the pale of the church.

When I make this statement you will know why I have chosen this text. The churches of Christendom are greatly agitated to-day, and we are all in some degree affected. It would be out of place to keep silence regarding these burning questions. I believe that a congregation has the right to know how their pastor stands. It is meet to discuss the great general questions that underlie the matters in dispute and to see whether our church rests on a sure foundation from which she cannot move without being false to herself. Or is our church going to sink in the quicksands of the passing opinions of the hour? In a word, we ask, how far are we to go in our liberty of thought on the one hand, and how firm and fast are we bound by obligation and vow on the other in teaching, in word and doctrine?

It is to be noted that these questions that are so prominent and prevailing here and now are by no means new. They were rampant in the infant church. It is also clear and plain that if there is no sure and fixed ground laid down for our guidance in proclaiming the Gospel, then these harassing questions must ever return. However different the shapes they assume, however varied the conditions under which they spring up, the questions are virtually the same as those Paul had to settle. A church that looks up with so much veneration as ours does to Paul may profitably ask, How did Paul deal with these vexed questions? How did he solve this ever-recurring problem? What was his opinion regarding the limits and relations subsisting between freedom and obligation in the proclamation of the Gospel?

We are struck, first of all, by the great breadth of the apostle's charity. He is speaking of such as bring for the edification of the church the most precious materials, such as gold, silver, precious stones. On the other hand, such as employ perishing and worthless material, as wood, hay, stubble. This they do, not with evil intent, but because they erroneously believe the material to be valuable, or at least useful.

Paul speaks, moreover, of a diversity of gifts, which comes to light in the work of building. He speaks of a deep knowledge on the one hand and a superficial knowledge on the other. Thus, there is an enduring and a transitory effect. He is not perplexed by this state of matters. He recognizes it as unavoidable. He bears with it. He rejoices over every skilful and wise builder. He bears also with those entangled with doubt or enslaved in the meshes of error. Paul utters no sentence of condemnation as touching the persons who build. He shows only how, when the house burns, wood, hay, stubble, go up in flaming fire, whilst the valuable material manifests its indestructible character. So must they who build foolishly resign themselves to hear, without displeasure, that their preaching and teaching will be found worthless in the day of trial when the testing time comes at the last day. All that they have wrought and taught shall perish, even though they themselves shall be saved so as by fire. He leaves you no room for doubt that the supreme test will be whether you have been building and working in the conviction that you are animated by the desire to serve God and by no other motive. "I," says he, "have planted, Apollos watered, but God giveth the increase." So we are both nothing—God is all in all. "God," said Luther, "can make ten Dr. Martins every day."

My dear brethren, we preachers are in constant danger of being intoxicated by the applause of men. We are so mixed up with everything that is uppermost in the questions of the hour that we are in continual peril. The popular current is so strong in its influence that we may be carried on the crest of a controversial wave much farther than we would. We need daily and hourly to bow the knee in our closets, that no word may be in our mouths than that which is given us of God; that no strange fire may be upon our altars; and that our own glory may hide itself behind the glory of our God. How much strife would at once cease if we would only lay Calvin's wise word to heart: "All to the glory of God."

Whilst Paul recognizes the diversities of gift and working as self-evident, he does not fail to remember the inexhaustible riches of the Gospel and the different characteristics of those to whom that Gospel is presented. These considerations make the problem a very complex one. In each individual the whole orb of the Gospel may be reflected, but only according to the measure of the mind and heart of the recipient, and with a certain one-sidedness. Paul apprehends the Gospel in one way, Peter in another, and John in another. It pertains to the richness of the good tidings of God that he bestows the fulness of his salvation to us by means of those through whom he speaks; and the message they bring is touched and tinged with the individuality of his servants.

The Historical Personality of Jesus

A church that would build without the Rock of Ages beneath it is as a house without a foundation. He who rejects this foundation puts it away or mutilates it—in a word, alters it so that it is no more capable of supporting the superstructure—deserves and is struck by the sharp condemning word that Paul spake when he said of those who preached another Gospel, which was no Gospel, "He is anathema;" that is to say, he has no right to a place in the church that has no other foundation than Christ. What does it mean when it is said that Jesus Christ is the foundation for the individual, for the congregation, and for the wider community called the church?

Notice, first of all, that Jesus Christ is to the apostle a historical person—a Person who came into the world, went about doing good, taught, suffered, died, rose again, and in a never-to-be-forgotten hour laid hold of the persecutor and made him a convert, a confessor, and an apostle. It was not ideas that transformed Paul; not a nebulous, ghostly imagining; not, as some to-day express it, an ideal of Christ about whom it makes no difference whether he ever lived at all—an incarnation of the good, the beautiful and the true—a great figure that manifests itself differently in every new century. My friends, such ideas as these the old world possessed, but they could not hinder the downfall of the world lying in wickedness. Christianity is not the product of thoughts that once issued from the brain of some great philosopher. It is a historical reality that out of a prehistoric reality entered into history in the person of Jesus. It is a historical fact that not ideas but a Person has redeemed the world. "A personality," says a philosophy of to-day, "can only be saved by a personality." The disease, the sore in us, in our wills, in our inner man with its weaknesses and sins, can only by personal power be healed. The only person from whom this healing and saving power can issue is Jesus Christ the Lord.

Whence had this historical person, Jesus, the right and the power to be the Saviour of the world? Whence had he the right to put forth claims that tower high as heaven above all other claims? I once stood in meditative mood on the shore of the Sea of Galilee. Within a radius of four or five miles were the cities where Christ labored and taught. What made the movement that issued from this lone corner of the world like unto the fountain which Ezekiel saw issuing from under the threshold of the temple, overspreading the earth, and carrying life and blessing wherever it went? Was it the beautiful words of the Teacher? For these words we have a parallel in some of the literatures of the ancient world. Nay, not these words, but the Person who stood behind the words. Jesus did not bring new thoughts into the world. He brought himself.

The Community of Faith

Do I need to say that we would never think of fastening men down to the minutest jot and tittle of a confession in which men have sought to express the sum of Christian doctrine, or the standard of Christian experience? Not the doctrine concerning Christ, not a formula about Christ, but Christ himself, the living Christ, is the foundation. Or do I need to say that we would never for a moment question the right of those who, seeking after truth, are troubled with doubts, to have a place within the church as worshipers and members? We will not seek to exclude them from companying with us because they cannot find complete satisfaction in any human formula, or are repelled from the confession of this or that century, and therefore do not find all they wish in our divine service. We would rather draw them closer to us. We will not drive them away. They may have been shocked by some unworthy presentation of the Gospel or by some inconsistencies manifested in those who professed and called themselves Christians. They may have so much that is Christlike in their hearts that the heart is Christian, whilst the head is heathen. Nor will we unchurch those who cannot find what they seek in this church, but say they find it in narrower circles, that are not of our denomination. We will rather build bridges for them; we will strive by the striving of love to lead them to cross the bridge and come into a great and beautiful church, so full of love and good deeds that every one may find in it his church home, where he would find room for his religious activity, and find all that is best in him, viz., his relationship to the living God, nourished and strengthened.

I will close by a word of warning and a word of comfort. First of all, the warning: I have said that the church cannot exist without a limit being set to her liberty of thought and teaching. The church is not a community of dogma, but of faith. It is not a uniform conviction that binds the members together, but a unity of faith—of faith proving itself in Christian experience and in Christian activity. From this personal experience, from this exercise of the new life of faith inspired by the spirit of Christ, everything radiates. It is remarkable how little Scripture teaches us about God, without at the same time bringing this into immediate connection with our life of faith. God is love, says John, but in the same breath he says, "he that dwelleth in love dwelleth in God and God in him." "God is a Spirit," says Christ, but he adds, "and they that worship must worship in spirit and in truth." Thus no doctrine helps and no orthodox opinion availeth unless our life is transformed and transfigured by it. Many a man stands far higher with his Christian experience than with his creed, and many a man far lower. How much is yet to be done that our creed (be it long or short) be manifested in Christian activity! Our faith should be the dominating factor in our home life, in our business, and in our social life. Let our faith show itself in the power of love offering itself, and in self-sacrifice forgetting itself. You have it in your power to show that the

FOR EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR

BY REV. J. H. JOWETT, D.D.

SUNDAY, July 20. Jeremiah 1: 7-19. "Jeremiah, what seest thou? And I said, I see a rod of an almond tree." And through the almond tree the Lord gave the trembling young prophet the strength of assurance. The almond tree is the first to awake from its wintry sleep. When all other trees are held in frozen slumber the almond blossoms are looking out on the barren world. And God is like that, awake and vigilant! Nobody anticipates him. Wherever Jeremiah was sent on his prophetic mission the Lord would be there before him. Before the prophet's enemies could get to work the Lord was on the field. In the wintriest circumstances of a prophet's life God is wide awake: "He that keepeth Israel shall neither slumber nor sleep."

And still the almond tree has its heartening significance for thee and me. Our God is wide awake! He looks out upon our wintry circumstances, and nothing is hid from his sight. There is no unrecognized and uncounted factor which may steal in furtively and take him by surprise. Everything is open. He is wide awake on the far-off field where the isolated missionary is plowing his lonely furrow. He is wide awake on the field of common labor where some young disciple finds it hard to keep clean hands while he earns his daily bread. If only we had our eyes anointed, we should see the almond tree and we should have the strong and quieting assurance that we are in the vigilant keeping of the sleepless God.

MONDAY, July 21. Exodus 5: 1-14. "Ye shall no more give the people straw to make brick as heretofore: let them go and gather straw for themselves." And so the first attempt at emancipation resulted in a more galling bondage. The people had been burdened with the making of bricks: now they are compelled to make bricks without straw. This is ever the story of freedom. The devil strengthens his bonds when the cry of liberty rings through the air. Tyranny brings out all her chains when the emancipator is at the gate. It looks sometimes as though it would have been wisest to let bad alone lest it become worse. But the way from the bad to the best is often through the worse.

When the Lord commanded the unclean spirit to come out of the boy "the spirit tore and rent him and left him half dead." What a price to pay for liberty! Through convulsions to peace! But one hour of freedom was more than compensation for the pains. So we will not be afraid, nor turned aside, when as soldiers of the kingdom we seem to do more harm than good. The enemy is bringing out his reserves, but his reserves are a mere handful compared to the reserves in the army of the Lord. His worst will be the dawn of our best.

TUESDAY, July 22. Exodus 5: 15-23. "The Lord look upon you, and judge; because ye have made our savor to be abhorred in the eyes of Pharaoh." The liberator was regarded as the cause of their more awful oppression! The people turned against their emancipator and charged him with aggravating their wrongs! That is the most bitter draught that is ever drunk by the knights of the Lord's crusade. To be denounced by the slave when we are seeking his freedom! To receive insult when we are engaged in mercy, and ingratitude and scorn while we are stooping in service!

How shall we think about it? We must think it was the way the Master went. "If they have called the master of the house Beelzebub, how much more shall they call them of his household?" And yet the insults did not turn him aside from his charge. No blast of ingratitude could blow out the lamp of his grace. No frosty hostility could shatter the purpose of his love. "He set his face steadfastly to go to Jerusalem," and he finished the work which had been given him to do.

WEDNESDAY, July 23. II Kings 18: 29-37. "Let not Hezekiah make you trust in the Lord." The devil loves to play upon our fears. He narrates some torn pages of history: he leads our startled thought around the life of our own day: and he shows us brutal power, flippant and triumphant. And he taunts us with the question: "What can God do for you? Make terms with me, and ye shall have corn and wine, a land of oil olive and of honey!"

Who has not heard the taunt? He seeks to frighten us with the powers that confront us. He mentions the power of custom, the power of habit, the power of society, the power of the dollar! "You are up against all these! You are helpless in their presence. You will find peace in surrender. The alternative is to be crushed!"

"But the people held their peace, and answered him not a word." That is the way of inspired wisdom. Silence is our best retort. In debate with such a wily advocate we might falter, and assuredly we should waste our strength. In discussing the devil's alternatives men become the victims of his charms. While he holds our attention he is sapping our moral strength. And so we must resort to silence, but not to unoccupied silence. "When Hezekiah heard it he went into the house of the Lord," and lifted up his heart in prayer. He refused speech with the enemy, he entered into communion with the Lord. That is the appointed way for the children of fear. Fear is transformed into courage, and foreboding into steadfast hope.

THURSDAY, July 24. James 5: 7-11. "Ye have seen the end of the Lord: that the Lord is very pitiful, and of tender mercy." And so we are bidden to be patient. We must wait to "the end of the Lord." The Lord's ends are attained through very mysterious means. Sometimes the means are in contrast to the ends. He works toward the harvest through winter's frost and snow. The maker of chaste and delicate porcelain reaches his lovely ends through an awful mortar where the raw material of bone and clay is pounded into a cream. In that mortar-chamber we have no hint of the finished ware. But be patient; even in this chamber of affliction the ware is on the way to glory!

And so it is with the ministries of our Lord. He leads us through discords into harmonies, through opposition into union, through adversities into peace. His means of grace are processes, sometimes gentle, sometimes severe, and our folly is to assume that we have reached his ends when we are only on the way to them. "The end of the Lord is very pitiful, and of tender mercy." Yes, his work will be crowned with grace. "Be patient, therefore," until it shall be spoken of thee and me—"And God saw that it was good."

FRIDAY, July 25. Lamentations 3: 1-9. "He hath brought me into darkness, but not into light." But a man may be in darkness, and yet in motion toward the light. I was in the darkness of the subway, it was close and oppressive, but I was moving toward the light and fragrance of the open country. I entered into a tunnel in the Black Country in England, but the motion was continued, and we emerged amid fields of loveliness. And therefore the great thing to remember is that God's darknesses are not his goals; his tunnels are means to get somewhere else. Yes, his darknesses are appointed ways to his light. In God's keeping we are always moving, and we are moving toward Emmanuel's land, where the sun shines and the birds sing night and day.

There is no stagnancy for the God-directed soul. He is ever guiding us, sometimes with the delicacy of a glance, sometimes with the firmer ministry of a grip, and he moves with us always, even through "the valley of the shadow of death." Therefore, be patient, my soul! the darkness is not thy bourne, the tunnel is not thy abiding home! He leadeth thee through disappointment and defeat, and he will bring thee to a large place where thou shalt know "the liberty of the glory of the children of God."

SATURDAY, July 26. Lamentations 3: 22-33. "His compassions fail not: they are new every morning." We have not to live on yesterday's manna; we can gather it fresh to-day. Compassion becomes stale when it becomes thoughtless. It is new thought that keeps our pity strong. If our perception of need can remain vivid, as vivid as though we had never seen it before, our sympathies will never fail. The fresh eye insures the sensitive heart. And our God's compassions are so new because he never becomes accustomed to our need. He always sees it with an eye that is never dulled by commonplace. We can look at a thing so often that we cease to see it. God always sees a thing as though for the first time. "Thou God seest me," and "his compassions fail not."

And if my compassions are to be like a river that never knows drought I must cultivate a freshness of sight. The horrible can lose its horrors. The daily tragedy can become the daily commonplace. Therefore must I ask the Lord for the daily gift of discerning eyes. "Lord, that I may receive my sight," and receive it new every morning! Give me the power to see the common as well as the uncommon! May that which is familiar startle me every day! With an always newly-awakened interest may I reveal "the compassions of the Lord!"

faith of Christ is that which makes life holy, and brings rest to the soul. It is ours to show that we bring gold, silver, precious stones to the upbuilding of our own selves on the foundation Jesus Christ, and to edify others also—those of our own household, our associates and all with whom we come into contact. That is the earnest admonition that must be taken to heart.

And now for comfort: If at the present hour the minds of thinking men stand in sharp antagonism to each other, that is no uncommon occurrence. I have said, Freedom and obligation in their province and relationship, that is the great problem which the church brought into the world. Both are needed. We must have liberty, but that liberty must have its bounds and limits. We must be bound, we must submit our wills, we must yield our thoughts to God's teaching. In the recognition of the true limits and relations of these two lies the well-being of the church. Where the relationship is disturbed, the church must suffer. If men's opinions about the boundary line differ or if in controversy about this limit men's minds break forth in furious strife we need have no fear. We are not dismayed by prevailing controversies. The strife of tongues does not affright us. The church has withstood many a shock and attacks far fiercer than those she has to meet to-day. Verily she will reap a blessing.

The questions of the hour are religious questions. Surely that is great gain. That will work out for the good of the church. Let us only be firm and faithful. Let us testify joyfully to the great worth of word and ordinance. Let us receive the spiritual graces they offer to us. Let us not be ashamed of the church's poverty. Let us learn more and more to emphasize the things on which we are agreed, and to avoid that which raises strife and division. Let us be broad as God's everlasting love, but narrow as God's everlasting righteousness. Above all, let us learn to carry to our closets the dire need of our time, so that when duty calls to the defense of the truth we may stand with the light of prayer illuminating our countenance. Then may we regard the earnest and alarming signs of our time not as forebodings of downfall, but rather as the glow of morning breaking through the clouds.

Then, if we ourselves will only be faithful—and surely it is our bounden duty to be faithful—then indeed the Lord will guide his church, make her victorious over every difficulty, and set her, firm and fast, on this one foundation, Jesus Christ, the same yesterday, to-day and forever.

THE GOSPEL AT "THE DERBY"

"DERBY DAY" IN THE MORNING. DR. DIXON PREACHING TO THE SERVANTS AND EARLY ARRIVALS AT EPSOM DOWNS RACE-COURSE

"DERBY DAY" IN THE AFTERNOON. ONE OF THE ENGLISH CLERGYMEN PREACHING IN THE MIDST OF THE CROWD

BY CLARA L. DIXON

THE "Derby Day" of 1913 will go down into history as one of the most eventful and spectacular that has ever been held. The race that is known the world over as "the Derby" marks the day that is as representative of England's horse world as the great regatta at Cowes and Henley typify its water sports. On Derby Day hundreds of thousands desert London for the race-course at Epsom Downs. All classes of society are there, the coster with his moke and cart, the earl with his coach and six. The moving throngs that fill the grandstands tier on tier and overflow to the edges of the race-track and the white-railed green of the paddock make a kaleidoscope of color beneath the early June sunshine. A vast cosmopolitan gathering; beautiful as only a holiday crowd can be, yet marred by one thing. Here, as nowhere else in all England, the god of chance holds sway. Gambling is the very life-blood of "the sport of kings." Eager, anxious faces in the throng portray the debasing mental agony of the gambler. In the grandstand wealth and position staked its money and eagerly watched for the winners while the crowds on foot moved restlessly round the paddock and the drinking-booths, gambling to the verge of ruin.

But the forces of evil did not have full sway, for a small group of earnest Christian workers, under the banner of the Open-Air Mission, held religious services on the race-course between the races, and over ten thousand people had at least a passing word which was enough to point them to Jesus and his cleansing blood.

This year Rev. A. C. Dixon of the Metropolitan Tabernacle, London, was in charge of the meetings. He, with about forty ministers and Christian laymen, arrived at Epsom Downs at ten in the morning. The day was fair and the mile walk from the station to the race-course was through English country moor, gay with the yellow gorse-covered hillsides. Gipsy wagons were scattered here and there, adding to the picturesqueness of the scene.

In the meanwhile, the little band of Christian workers were soon on the race-course, singing the old familiar hymn, "Jesus Saves," and it was not long before they had an audience, although it was a very transient one.

Rev. J. R. Howden, a Church of England clergyman of Norwich, was the first speaker. When he had finished, Dr. Dixon called for Scripture texts and met with a ready response. After a hymn had been sung, he launched out into an evangelistic address suitable to the place and the occasion. He said in part:

"The purpose of our visit to this race-track is that we may induce you to accept Jesus Christ as your Saviour and Lord. You will then possess him and all he can give, while he will possess you. He may not be so rich in possessing us, but we are immensely rich in possessing him.

"Another Scripture I would like for you to take away with you; 'He made Him to be sin for us, who knew no sin; that we might be made the righteousness of God in him.' We are not told that Christ was made a sinner—God loves sinners—but he was made sin, the thing which God hates, in order that we might become righteousness, which God loves. Our Lord Jesus took the place of the sinner by bearing his sin in its guilt and penalty in order that we might have his righteousness. If we accept him as our Saviour, our guilt passes to him and his righteousness passes to us.

"And this may be done in a moment of time. If you came to this race-course under the guilt of sin, you may leave it rejoicing in the fact that your guilt is gone forever, because Christ bore it when he died for you on the cross.

"A man named John M. Wood was walking down Water Street in New York City, in delirium tremens, with the sixth dismissal from the United States Navy in his pocket, on the charge of chronic alcoholism, without a friend or a penny in the world. He was so hopeless that he was making his way to the East River, bent on suicide. He saw a light coming through a transom above a door on the other side of the street; and with that light came floating out the strains of the familiar song:

> "There is a fountain filled with blood,
> Drawn from Immanuel's veins;
> And sinners, plunged beneath that flood,
> Lose all their guilty stains.

"John M. Wood stopped and listened, as he said to himself: 'Why, that is the song my mother used to sing when I was a youngster. I will go over and see who sings it before I kill myself.' He went through the swinging doors and found himself in the midst of about a hundred wrecks of humanity like himself. Jerry McAuley was standing before them with open Bible, talking in a loving, familiar way. 'Now, boys,' he said, 'if you mean business you may be saved from your sins. Christ can save a river pirate, a drunkard and a thief, for he saved me.' John M. Wood said that there came flickering into his mind a little ray of hope, and he said, 'If that is true, I'll try it.' At the invitation of Jerry he came up and knelt down at a front seat. Jerry knelt by him and whispered into his ears words of promise. The poor drunkard in delirium tremens then and there accepted Christ as his Saviour and rose from his knees a free man. The shackles of habit were broken, and he lived a useful, sober life, until three and a half years afterwards he stepped into God's chariot and went into the glory. What Christ did for John M. Wood, he will do for each one of you, if you will let him, by turning from your sin to him as your Saviour.

"I have heard of an Englishman who was walking through the slave market in Cairo some years ago. He came upon a black slave in handcuffs to whom he was attracted by his manly appearance. Going up to the Arab slave-trader, he asked the price of this man. The slave was intelligent enough to know that an Englishman ought not to be dealing in human flesh and blood, and he said to a fellow slave at his side, 'I would like to put a dagger into his heart!' But the Englishman went on, finished the bargain, and then came before the slave with a roll of money in one hand and a roll of paper in the other. 'I have bought you, my man,' he said, 'and now I will give you back to yourself. You are free, and here is some money to begin life with; go out and make a man of yourself.' The slave was, of course, greatly surprised and could hardly take it in. He said to the Englishman, 'Do you mean to say that I can do just as I please?' 'Certainly,' was the reply. 'Then, sir, I would like to go with you and serve you the rest of my life.' It is thus that God brings us into loving bondage to himself. He gives us complete liberty, and then we rejoice to use that liberty in serving him. 'If the Son shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed.' Nothing enslaves like sin. It is a cruel taskmaster; and we offer you perfect liberty of soul and body through Jesus Christ our Lord."

Rev. H. C. Wagnell, missioner of the Baptist Union, was the next speaker, and when he had finished Rev. John Wilson of the Baptist Tabernacle, Woolwich, told an experience of a man saved at the "Derby" years ago. He came to the races and was impressed by the speaking. Later he went to a special service in Mr. Wilson's church and there confessed Christ. Afterwards he became a mighty preacher of the Gospel, and when he died 1,300 people followed his body to the grave. Faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the Word of God.

Dan Crawford, twenty-two years a missionary in the heart of Africa, had a word to give. He could not resist the temptation of bringing in as illustrations his "dear old black men," but he used them to point the way to the Saviour.

After lunch another little prayer meeting was held, and then part went again to the race-course and part to the hillside. Those on the race-course were soon requested to leave because of the three o'clock race, and in the midst of a sentence the speaker was obliged to stop. Had it been thirty years ago, this request would have been made manifest by a shower of rotten eggs or a deluge of flour, but although the open-air workers are at the races under sufferance, still they have no violence to contend with, as in the old days. Considering the crowd and its character, there was very little confusion and interruption; a little mocking and a few jeering words, but that was all.

—OUR CHILDREN'S HOME booklet for the summer season of 1913 is now ready. It will be mailed free to any subscriber who sends us a postal. Copies will be sent to interested friends on request. Contributions to cover the expenses of operating this beautiful charity will be welcomed.

—THE INCOME TAX clauses of the tariff bill now being considered by Congress brought the rapid progress which has been made with the bill to an abrupt end. In the first place the question of the amount of income to be exempted from the levy caused a long and heated discussion. The committee amendment to the House income tax provision reduced the normal exemption from $4,000 to $3,000, but allows additional exemptions of $1,000 for a dependent husband or wife and $500 for each of not more than two dependent children.

—THE LONDON DAILY TELEGRAPH'S correspondent at Salonica recently forwarded a full account of the fighting which took place on the last of June when the Bulgarians were disarmed by the Greeks. He reports that eighty Bulgarians were killed or wounded in one house alone, and that the slaughter in other houses was on a similar scale. The Balkan situation is undoubtedly in a very threatening state. Turkey is believed to be ready to throw in her lot with Servia and Greece against Bulgaria unless Bulgaria should promptly decide to abandon her claim for heavy war indemnity.

—The opening of the fiscal year finds the treasury in a prosperous condition. The ordinary government receipts for the twelve months were $723,782,921, as compared with receipts of $691,140,455 in the fiscal year 1912. The ordinary expenditures for 1913 amounted to $683,699,692, which was $28,895,067 greater than the ordinary disbursements for the fiscal year 1912. Thus the surplus was $40,083,299, as compared with a surplus of $36,835,830 for the fiscal year 1912. The receipts increased all along the line. Customs receipts rose from $311,257,347 in 1912 to $318,142,344 in 1913. Ordinary revenue receipts collectible from tobacco, liquors, and similar sources increased from $292,963,004 in 1912 to $309,477,913 in 1913. Corporation tax receipts grew from $28,683,102 in 1912 to $34,948,870 in 1913, while miscellaneous receipts increased from $58,346,999 in 1912 to $61,213,793 in 1913.

WHERE IT HAPPENED—THE STORY OF THE EMPTY SLEEVES

THE greatest reunion that the old boys of the Blue and the Gray had ever had or ever will have is over. With fine precision the programs that had been arranged were carried out. Members of the cabinet, governors, senators and generals came and went in the stream of visitors that represented every type and every class of American society. There were speeches and congratulations, and the air was filled with the music of many bands, but the set programs and celebrations were dwarfed into insignificance by the reunion spirit of the mighty gathering on the field of Gettysburg. On the 29th of June, the hosts began to arrive; twenty-five thousand the first day and through June 30, July 1, until seventy thousand veterans of the North and South were in camp together. The first two days were rather trying ones for the soldiers of '63, on account of the intense heat. There were several prostrations and two deaths were reported. But this was considered as little short of wonderful by the medical officers, as few of the veterans can be under sixty-five and the oldest is well over ninety. One of the newspaper correspondents writes of them:

"It ought to be emphasized, however, that the alarmist talk about the prospective death-rate is without foundation. There are nearly 70,000 veterans here in the camp, to say nothing of the vast crowds in town, and the normal death-rate for 70,000 men over sixty years of age is very big. The death-rate here has been very much under the average for such men. Pity for these supposedly enfeebled and tottering old men is out of place. They are an astonishingly sturdy and husky lot of old men, as they show by tramping all day over hills that would break the heart of a younger and more delicate generation. They stand straight, and have big voices, and walk with a swing, and many of them are not yet gray.

"It is not so surprising when you remember that most of these men are the very young fellows, the mere boys of fifteen or sixteen, who went into the army, some of them, for a devil-may-care love of fighting. The older men who enlisted died years ago, and those who are left are the gallant young irresponsibles who enlisted before they got out of grammar school and patriotically prevaricated about their ages to get in. Such youngsters usually have the constitutions of horses, and it is not surprising that at sixty-six or so they are the lustiest lot of old men that could be gathered together."

On July 1, Secretary of War Garrison formally opened the celebration. The special representative of the New York Times adds in the same account from which the above quotation is made: "But that wasn't the event. The event was the hunting up of the man who shot you, if you could find him, and if you couldn't, then the hunting up of the man whose regiment fought yours. There was an amazing number of such reunions.

"Along Cemetery Ridge were several scouting parties, old Union and Confederate soldiers, all bent on similar missions. One Union soldier had loitered behind the squad that he was with, and while he was standing there, with his hands clasped behind him, studying the field, the Confederates came up. 'The place is right here,' said the leader. 'This is the Bloody Angle, and I was shot right here where I stand now. I would have died if it hadn't been for a Union soldier, who saved my life. I've often wished I could see him, but I never saw him after that day.'

"The old Federal turned around and surveyed him with placid interest: 'That's a funny coincidence,' he remarked. 'I was at the Bloody Angle, too, and there was a rebel there who was pretty badly hurt. I first gave him a drink of water, and then I took him upon my back and carried him out of the line of fire to the field hospital. Some other Union soldiers must have been doing something like that to you at the same time.'

"'But, friend,' cried the Confederate, 'that's just what that Yankee did for me. There couldn't have been two cases just like that at the same time. Let me look at you.' He grabbed the Yankee by the shoulder and looked at him long and earnestly.

"'You are the man,' he said. Further inquiry put it beyond a doubt. The Confederate was A. C. Smith of the Fifty-sixth Virginia, a part of Garnett's gallant brigade, and the Union man was Albert N. Hamilton of the Seventy-second Pennsylvania."

An old Virginia soldier, who had got into camp late, wandered through the thousands of tents last night, trying to find out where he was located. His idea was to open each tent flap he saw and ask the occupant where he could find his regiment. As it would take probably a month to make the rounds this did not look like a very hopeful prospect, but the old man persevered. As he opened the fifth tent flap on his travels and explained his trouble, a man inside asked him what regiment he belonged to.

"The Twenty-eighth Virginia," he answered.

"The deuce you did!" said the man inside. "Do you know what became of your regimental flag?"

"I don't," said the old Confederate. "You see, I was with Armistead's brigade, the one that got into the Yankee lines when Pickett made his charge and made what they call the 'high-water mark of the rebellion.' I don't rightly remember just what happened to the flag after we jumped into those Yankee batteries, but I think some of you got it."

"We did," said the man in the tent. "I'm Captain T. H. Pressnal of Company F, First Minnesota. We captured your flag, and we've got it now in St. Paul. The other fellows in this tent will be in in a minute, and all of them belonged to the regiment that got your flag. We've got a spare blanket here, and you'll never find your tent to-night. Come in and bunk with us."

As the old Confederate was leaving this morning to find his own quarters, after he and his Minnesota friends had fought the battle over most of the night, he said: "I'm sorry we lost that flag, but if we had to, I'm glad it was you fellows got it."

The rebel gray is a popular color in Gettysburg. Any man who wears it is sure of a tumultuous greeting from all the old men in blue who can get within gunshot of him. All through the streets to-day the same picture was being repeated every moment—some old man in gray coming along and being instantly pounced upon by half a dozen men in blue and being borne off in triumph. It is a real reunion, the genuine article.

A reunion? Why, all over camp to-night the Union men and the Confederates are talking about amalgamating the United Confederate Veterans and the Grand Army of the Republic under the name of the "United Veterans of the United States." The Confederates are wild for it. It isn't merely good-natured talk; they mean it.

The Union men invaded the Confederate camp over near Seminary Ridge to-day and greeted the Johnnies tempestuously. The Johnnies made the Yanks as welcome as the flowers in May. Mrs. Longstreet (the widow of the Confederate general), meeting an old soldier with a gray pair of trousers (he had shed his coat because of the ninety-two degrees the thermometer registered), asked why he, a Union man, should wear a gray suit.

"Me?" he said, surprised. "I am not a Yankee. Fought under Longstreet. I'm from Mississippi."

"Why do you wear that badge, then?" asked Mrs. Longstreet. He had on a blue badge marked Fifth Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry.

"Why," he said, "a Yank came along to-day from the Fifth Pennsylvania and asked me if I'd trade badges with him, after we'd had a talk and found out where we were at Gettysburg. So we traded. He's wearing my badge now—Fifteenth Mississippi. Says he'll keep it as long as he lives."

GOOD-NIGHT ON THE BATTLEFIELD

Gettysburg, Pa., July 2, 1863

GOOD-NIGHT, my comrades dear, good-night;
The sun is setting slow;
Around me evening's changeful light
Spreads soft an Orient glow;
While, rising from the green-clad hills,
The moon attracts my sight
To shimmering waves and glinting rills;
My comrades dear, good-night!

Here, underneath this stranger sky,
We bivouac from the strife;
Weary to-night, hence would we hie,
Nor wake at drum and fife;
But this deep hour's for watchful men;
'Tis full of vestal light—
Alas! at morn we strive again;
My comrades dear, good-night!

Yet in this calm and fervid hour
My soul finds peace once more,
As yon pale moon's mysterious power
Opes wide enchantment's door,
And lights each fairy-haunted spot
With scene so passing bright,
On cloud and field, o'er tent and cot;
My comrades dear, good-night!

The Meeting of the Heroes

BY FAR the finest thing at the Gettysburg reunion—where the tents of North and South were pitched side by side on the old battlefield—was not the official celebration, nor the spectacular multitudes, nor the eloquent addresses. The finest thing of it all was the splendid spirit of comradeship, the spontaneous flowing together of the hearts of brave men in that deep and true friendship which is possible only among the brave. Fifty years have passed since the guns of Gettysburg became silent; but the picture of that decisive field, and of the grand struggle that reached a climax there, has never been forgotten. Those white-haired heroes, meeting together once again on the old familiar camping-ground, gave to the nation a noble object lesson in the magnanimous friendship of great souls—a friendship sanctified by suffering and with the charm of that feeling of mutual appreciation which gallant foemen feel toward each other. They had become fully reconciled during the mellowing years. They had learned to take the wider and nobler view, that the man who is ready to die for what he believes to be right, is worthy of all honor. This was the spirit that prevailed among the seventy thousand veterans at Gettysburg and which stamped its character upon the whole event.

The heroic women, too, were not forgotten. Those who in that long past day were young and sprightly and who did a beautiful and self-sacrificing work in camp and hospitals, shared in the honors of the celebration. There are thousands of Americans, North and South, who, though absent from the gathering, are with it fully in spirit, and who will rejoice that the reunion has emphasized before the whole world the hearty and sincere unity of our people, and that the nation has rendered equal honor to the memories of all the heroes of Gettysburg, dead and living.

The Midsummer Hot Wave

WITH the temperature throughout a large part of the country ranging in the nineties and with a record-breaking humidity from the Lakes to the Atlantic, the familiar theories concerning "keeping cool" in summer quickly reduce themselves to the simple formula of "light effort, light clothing and lighter diet." While this advice can be followed by many, by far the larger number are so situated that they cannot help themselves. This is especially true of the population of our great cities, where a sudden burst of midsummer heat, lasting over a few days, is invariably accompanied by numerous deaths and prostrations, as was the case in Chicago, St. Louis, Milwaukee, Kansas City and New York, in late June and early July. Conditions in the tenement districts of New York during those sweltering days, when every puff of air seemed as though wafted from a furnace, can be better imagined than described. And it is the little helpless children who suffer most. This year the appeals from tenement homes in behalf of the little ones who would be physically reinvigorated by a ten days' outing at the CHRISTIAN HERALD Children's Home at Mont-Lawn have been unusually heavy and urgent. We wish we could take them all, and that the "Children's Paradise" might this summer have the largest population in its history; but that, of course, is impracticable. During the entire season we can accommodate about three thousand. Our readers and their friends have been the stanch patrons of Mont-Lawn in past years. Many have sent us contributions for the work this season, but we extend a cordial invitation to every one to have a share in this beautiful work among the children of the tenements. Send in your gift to-day, so that you may have a little protégé at Mont-Lawn this summer. Every contribution will be welcomed, and every giver will be a joy-bringer, gladdening the heart of some poor little waif, who is looking forward wistfully to the happy land of which he may have heard much, though he has never yet seen it

Wiping Out the Opium Traffic

WHEN President Yuan Shi Kai some time ago publicly announced that the government of China would leave no stone unturned until it had wholly suppressed the opium traffic in the new republic, those who had been fighting the evil with varying success for many years took fresh hope. Now, further occasion for encouragement of its ultimate suppression comes from the official statement in the British Parliament that the English Government is preparing to revise the 1911 treaty and will send no more opium to China. Under the present treaty, China, when the present stock of opium was consumed, would have the right to receive from India another and final supply of 25,000 chests more, representing a revenue of $55,000,000 to England, but this final instalment will never be sent. Unless some unexpected change takes place in the present plans, the new republic has received the last ounce of the drug she will ever get from India. In sacrificing a big source of revenue from the sale of the Indian drug, England has done well, but it should not be forgotten that opium for over half a century has kept China's millions in bondage and has retarded the development, physical and material as well as spiritual, of that country. President Yuan Shi Kai put the case concretely in these memorable words:

> China has been dying from this curse for more than half a century—fifty-nine years, to be exact. Her people, overcome by this vile drug, have been half asleep and have not known that they and their country were dying. Years ago the nation appealed for outside aid in its suppression, and the world knows what aid was rendered. The drug was forced upon us more than before. For nearly sixty years it has stood as a great crime of humanity. But we will stop it, and free the land of the devouring scourge. Our National Assembly has already passed many laws regarding it, and these laws will be enforced. We are establishing an army, and that army will fight opium and opium-smugglers on all the frontiers of land and sea, opium dealers and subdealers in all of the cities and towns, and opium users everywhere.

It now remains for China to adopt strong measures to stop the cultivation of the poppy at home. Until that is done thoroughly, her people will continue to be slaves of the old-time habit. This has been done in some districts, but in others official interference is slight, and the usual opium harvest will be as big as ever this year. If China means to utilize the monopoly to her own financial advantage, and does not stop the cultivation of the drug, her people will have gained little by the sacrifice of India's trade.

Courage and Conquest

IT WOULD be difficult to decide in what field of struggle the indomitable soul of man finds its freest expression of the courage that is in it. In every age, the spirit of adventure has spurred men to the point of holding life very lightly, where high achievement was possible. In the experimen stage of the submarine and the aeroplane, hundr of lives have been sacrificed; but every loss brought success one step nearer than before. the world has always been willing to pay for triumphs. In aviation hundreds have perished attempts at long-distance flight, and now we h the news of the wonderful achievement of Brin jonc De Moulinais, a French aeronaut, who, on J 2, completed an aerial journey of 3,100 miles, fr Paris to St. Petersburg and back, being the long voyage thus far recorded. This conqueror of air is a mere lad of twenty-one. Part of the ti he was traveling at 110 miles an hour, and fo short distance he attained a speed of 140 miles hour. Traveling at a great height over the Bal Sea, he was seriously confused by mistaking group of islands for dancing and vanishing clou but his nerve of steel kept him from losing head, which doubtless is the reason why so ma aeronauts suddenly "go to pieces" and perish. H wonderful adventure will doubtless stimulate ot ers to still more daring attempts, involving n sacrifice of lives laid on the altar of aerial conque

The Huguenots Then and Now

TO THOSE who are familiar with the record the Huguenot persecution, the account of t celebration of the Huguenot landing at New R chelle, N. Y., printed on another page, will have timely and special interest. Those French Protes ants, before they sought a refuge in America i 1688, had fought a long and apparently hopeles battle for religious freedom. The Edict of Nante granted in 1598, had guaranteed a degree of tolera tion; but its revocation by Louis XIV at the inst gation of the Jesuits in 1685, accompanied by th entire proscription of Protestantism in France, th closing of churches and schools, the prohibition o Protestant teaching of children by their parent the general confiscation of the property of Protest ant refugees, and other rigid measures of religiou oppression, drove them into exile. No sadder stor darkens the pages of history than the experience of the Huguenots, whose lineal descendants con ducted the recent celebration at New Rochelle.

One of the speakers on that occasion was Mr W. Bourke Cockran, lawyer, ex-Congressman, an a representative Catholic orator. That he was accorded the privilege of making an address at the celebration is of itself a remarkable illustration of the spirit of religious tolerance for which the Huguenot forefathers had fought and suffered, and which they had found to be the dominant note in the life of the new West. Mr. Cockran is a graceful and persuasive speaker, and after reviewing the history of Huguenot oppression abroad, declared that "the American spirit of to-day is this Edict of Nantes, with its toleration in actual operation, or rather with its spirit in effect." He added that "every one recognizes that the basis of all laws should be the Sermon on the Mount, and that it is not the function of the state to support the church, but it is the function of the church to support the state."

Is it not too much to assume that Mr. Cockran spoke by authority as the representative of the Catholic Church? Standing by itself, his statement is indisputable, but we should hesitate, in view of all the evidence to the contrary, to accept it as the final conclusion of official Catholicism. If it were so, a change must have "come o'er the spirit of its dream." The true attitude of Americans of all religious denominations, and especially of American Protestants, should be one of eternal vigilance. Every Protestant publication should be a watch-tower and every pastor a sentinel on the heights, vigilant and alert against any encroachment from whatever source, by any religion, upon the independence of the state. If the Roman Church has accepted, as a final exposition of its views on this subject, the interpretation of Mr. Cockran, it is a new revelation, and a welcome one. If, however, it was simply an oratorical platitude, the truth and reality of which have yet to be demonstrated, we can only regard it as another instance of the wish being father to the thought.

To Visit South America

—EX-PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT has accepted an invitation to visit the Argentine Republic, and deliver several addresses on the principles of democracy and other subjects of international social interest. He will leave New York in October, and, while in South America, will visit Brazil and Chili, and may make a tour of the tropical interior.

Iount Vesuvius Becoming Active

NOR the first time since 1908 flames were observed the other day shooting up from Mount Vesuvius. The uppermost crater emitted a dense column of smoke, which fretly showed strong reflections of flames lower , with an occasional eruption of fire. Profes- Mercalli, director of the observatory, reports the lava streams, which were recently obed, are becoming continuous. There is the est concern and alarm upon the part of those he danger zone at the mountain's activity. 'l/ have a right to be afraid, as Vesuvius has a record of deadly doing. The first record of volcanic activity of Vesuvius was in 79 A.D. r to that time its danger was not dreamed over. ides were beautifully decorated with vines, and crater, partly filled with water, was used as a ress by Spartacus and others. Sixteen years re the eruption there was a warning in the hquake which threw down the cities of Hercuum and Pompeii. On August 24, 79 A.D., the ntain poured forth black smoke and threw n stones and ashes and ice on the region round ut. The elder Pliny, in rge of the fleet near by, ed at once for the relief the horror-stricken initants. He landed as near base of the mountain as sible, and was killed by sulphur fumes that enoped him. The mountain ew down a covering of nty feet of ashes on Pomi, which under it remained tionless and hidden for hteen hundred years, and ptied mud on Herculaim which, with subsequent peated eruptions, made a ckness of from eighty to a ndred feet. Since this first e, Vesuvius has had connt eruptions down through e centuries, and it is to be ped that the present one ll not sacrifice precious lives many of them have done. ere is a revelation of serity as well as of mildness the physical, mental and iritual realm. There are ngers in these realms to ich people pay very little tention. They will make eir homes under volcanoes, the earthquake tract, and se up to the deadly tidal ave. The prophet gives this scription of the relation of the God of nature to e volcano:

And the mountains shall be molten under him, and the vals shall be cleft, as wax before the fire, and as the waters that e poured down a steep place. (Micah 1: 4.)

MOUNT VESUVIUS, WHICH IS NOW IN ERUPTION; FROM ACROSS THE BAY OF NAPLES

Girl Rescues Drowning Persons

SCREAMS of a young couple thrown into Long Island Sound off New York by the overturning f a small power canoe attracted the attention ne other afternoon of Miss Elsie V. Askey of Villette Avenue, who was cruising in the vicinity ith a party of friends in her motor boat. Running her boat up to within a short distance of the truggling couple, Miss Askey threw off a light coat he was wearing and dived into the water. She wam to the man, who was almost exhausted, havng aided his young lady companion to the overurned canoe, to which she now clung. Miss Askey rasped the man and swam with him to her boat, he Eva. She then went back to the woman, clingng to the canoe, and swam with her to the boat. She conveyed them to New Rochelle, and they were ent by automobile to Mount Vernon. The rescue f these persons from drowning was done in the oolest, most calculating and prompt manner. The eroine is an expert swimmer, having taken medals ecently at the swimming and diving contests of the Country Club of South Norwalk, Conn. She is lso interested in social betterment work, and is an ctive member of the Olin Methodist Church in the Bronx, New York City, and a faithful teacher in ts Sunday school. Here physical salvation of the drowning couple is a type of the spiritual rescue work she is doing in the church; and she belongs to the class thus described:

He which converteth the sinner from the error of his way shall save a soul from death, and shall hide a multitude of sins. (James 5: 20.)

Rich Automobile Driver Punished

A WEALTHY young merchant of one of the cities of New Jersey was sentenced to thirty days at hard labor at the county farm recently for wrecking a car and injuring himself and three others on a night joy-riding expedition. The simple fact of wrecking the car would not have called down upon him the punishment, but the fact that he was so full of champagne that he was unfit to manage the car brought him under the penalty of a law just passed by the New Jersey Legislature, imposing imprisonment upon a man undertaking to run an automobile while intoxicated. It is necessary for society to make the strictest exactions with reference to motor car accidents, and nothing is more necessary than requiring auto drivers to be sober men. It is rather surprising that a rich man should have been one of the first to be caught in the trap of the new law, for though there is a growing healthy sentiment on the subject, it is still more difficult to convict a rich than a poor man of crime. If the man's debauch had not been so well advertised by his sending three patients to the public hospital, it is likely that he would not have been arrested and punished for his drunkenness as a driver. That he received the prison sentence is an encouraging sign of the triumph of our democracy, where equal justice should be meted out to all, the richest as well as the poorest. This man, taken out of a home of wealth and culture and set to work as a criminal in the field, belongs to the class whose brains were addled with wine, described by the prophet:

But they also have erred through wine, and through strong drink are out of the way. (Isa. 28: 7.)

Flour Explosion Wrecks Mill

THAT flour, the softest and most innocent thing in the world apparently, the very staff of life, could by any process turn to an engine of destruction, wrecking the mill that makes it and killing many people, as it did in one of the large cities of the country recently, would be thought incredible. But once in a long while, under certain rare conditions, it does act this way and becomes a terrible instrument of ruin. There is a scientific reason for its action. Gunpowder, dynamite, and other recognized explosives are all capable of suddenly releasing enormous power because they combine in close proximity finely divided carbon with exactly the necessary quantity of oxygen for its complete combustion, or, as a chemist would say, its oxidation. Flour contains these same elements, but usually they are held together in safe proportion. But once in a while the flour dust of the bin or mill is in such a condition that a spark, or even a jar, will produce an explosion as violent and from the same reason as that of nitroglycerine. The peaceful releasing of the explosive elements that wrecked the mill is described by the prophet in the burning of fuel and the baking of bread.

Then shall it be for a man to burn; for he will take thereof, and warm himself; yea, he kindleth it, and baketh bread. (Isa. 44: 15.)

Support of Aged Ministers

THE shamefully inadequate provision made for the support of the aged ministers of the Gospel of most denominations in this country is in marked contrast to the superb provision which, according to a recent cable despatch, is made for them in Germany. There, it is stated, the young minister starts usually at $500, and a parsonage. This salary is increased every few years until, at sixty-five, the minister receives $2,500, the largest compensation permissible, to which is to be added the use of the parsonage and certain fees given him. At sixty-five the minister can withdraw on a pension if he shall so elect, or if the parish shall so desire. Or he can continue by general consent five years longer. On withdrawing he receives as a pension for the rest of his life two-thirds of his last and highest salary. On his death his widow receives an adequate pension for the remainder of her days, and also each of her children until their sixteenth or eighteenth year. Thus, the older the minister is in years and experience, the larger is his salary while active and pension when retired. The trouble is that this ideal way of providing for aged ministers in Germany is under the auspices of the established church, which is contrary to our American ideas of the necessity of a divorcement of church and state and the support of the minister by voluntary contributions rather than by public tax. Yet Christ's followers here ought to be just as humane and grateful in the treatment of their aged preachers as is the German Government. Fortunately there is now a steady marked improvement among the churches in the care of their superannuate members, helping God to answer this prayer of age:

Now also when I am old and grayheaded, O God, forsake me not. (Ps. 71: 18.)

Weighted by Fish, Drowns

DRAGGED down by a string of fish weighing forty-one pounds, which he had tied about his neck, Henry C. Titman, eighteen years old, was drowned the other day in Paulins Kill, near Newton, N. J. The young man and Edward and Lester Huff had been fishing all day, and, returning home, they undertook to swim 150 feet to the opposite shore. Titman, being the best swimmer, proposed to carry the fish over, and foolishly tied them about his neck. As they went into the water, he said: "This has been a lucky day for us. This is such a fine catch." The fish were too heavy for him. When about half way over, he suddenly sank, and before his companions could get to him, he had drowned. Many men overweight themselves with devotion to the things of this world and drown their own souls in the depths of materialism. The apostle describes the drowning of the soul with material weights.

But they that will be rich fall into temptation and a snare, and into many foolish and hurtful lusts, which drown men in destruction and perdition. (I Tim. 6: 9.)

MEN AND EVENTS IN THE WORLD'S NEWS

TWENTY-FOUR denominations a few weeks ago joined in the celebration of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Brotherhood of Andrew and Philip. Special services were held by each of the thousand chapters of the order scattered over the globe from New York to Australia. In Reading, Pa., the Second Reformed Church was the focal point of the celebration, for it was there that the first chapter of the Brotherhood was formed in 1888 under the direction of Dr. Rufus W. Miller. In Philadelphia seventy chapters, numbering in membership over six thousand, gave special recognition to the silver jubilee. The order's largest chapter, that of the Bethany Presbyterian Church of Philadelphia, numbering nine hundred members, dedicated the beautiful new addition to its brotherhood house on South Street. This house now contains a splendid modern auditorium, a well equipped gymnasium, a good big swimming pool and large recreation rooms. At the national headquarters of the order in Philadelphia Congressman William S. Bennet and Dr. C. L. Goodell of New York were the chief speakers in connection with the celebration.

Silver Jubilee of the Brotherhood of Andrew and Philip

REV. RUFUS W. MILLER, D.D.
Founder and Hon. President Brotherhood of Andrew and Philip

Personal sympathy, prayer and discriminating helpfulness are the keynotes of the work of the brotherhood. Prayer and service were taken as rules of life by fifteen young men in the initial group at Reading when the brotherhood was originated by Dr. Miller. The organization was founded in the spirit of the words, "There is no service like his that serves because he loves." Each member pledged himself to pray daily for young men and to make an effort every week to bring at least one young man to the services of the church. The International Council, which includes chapters in Japan, Great Britain, Canada and Australia as well as the United States, has now an aggregate membership of 35,000.

The brotherhood has proved to be not only inspirational but unifying. Men from different sections of the country and of different nationalities, as well as from different branches of the church, have been drawn together as never before. Men in different walks of life have acted under the common impulse for service. The twenty-five years of the Brotherhood's existence have been marked by steadily increasing usefulness and by the introduction of new ideas which have worked splendidly for the advancement of the ideals of the organization. So successful have the efforts been that they have received that sincerest form of flattery, imitation by a number of other societies.

The international officers of the society are: Honorary president, Dr. Rufus W. Miller; president, William M. Gordon; vice-presidents, Harvey C. Miller and Dr. B. K. Wilbur; treasurer, Roland K. Evanson; recording secretary, G. Percy Fox; general secretary, R. Howard Taylor. J. A. S.

SITUATED in the interior of the continent, cut off from contact with the outside world, Bolivia was the last of the ten republics of South America to feel the influence of that progressive movement which resulted from the attention of North American and European financiers being drawn to the wonderful possibilities of South America. At length, however, thanks to the enterprise of British capitalists, the Antofagasta Railway—at first merely intended to meet the needs of the saltpeter "pampa"—was extended to Uyuni, then to Oruro, and finally to La Paz itself, carrying progress in its train. The increased facilities of communication resulted in the influx of foreigners, business men, and educationalists, who found a hearty welcome as representatives of a more advanced civilization.

Bolivia's March Toward Prosperity and Enlightenment

Bolivians, too, began to travel more in Europe, and made pilgrimages to Paris, the Mecca of the educated South American. There they imbibed the advanced principles of liberty, both religious and political, and the rudiments of enlightened government. Returning to their "patria" they determined not to rest until they had placed their country in the front rank of South American republics. Many of these men, keen, intellectual and enthusiastic, are to be found in La Paz to-day as leaders of the Liberal Party in Congress; newspaper editors and university professors, still following their high ideal.

Bolivian society is composed of three strata. Firstly, we have the "gente decente," or white people who show no trace of Indian blood. This class is small but necessarily influential; indeed, all the government of the country is in their hands. Next come the "cholos"—those of mixed Spanish and Indian blood; and lastly, the pure Indians, who form an immense submerged class; superstitious, ignorant, down-trodden; yet splendid workmen and one of the chief sources of national wealth. It is estimated that of the 3,000,000 people who comprise the Bolivian nation only about 200,000 can read and write. The great mass of these literate people belong to the "gente decente," while the "cholo" and Indian classes are almost totally submerged in ignorance. Protestant missions have of late occupied themselves with these abandoned Indians, and the Bolivian Indian Mission, which has its center in San Pedro de Buena Vista, has some ten workers engaged in medical, educational and evangelistic work. These workers are studying the Quichua language, and most of them are now able to make themselves understood in their dealings with the non-Spanish-speaking Indians. The American and British Bible Societies are now busily engaged in translating the New Testament into this Indian tongue.

The "Young Bolivian," too, is deeply impressed with the need of higher and more thorough education among the upper classes, and some years ago invited the Methodist Episcopal Mission to open up educational work in the republic. The mission was quick to seize the opportunity and now possesses first-rate colleges in La Paz and Cochabamba, and counts among its pupils the sons of many of the best families of the land. These schools are liberally subsidized by the government, and thus are no drain upon the mission funds. Under the able direction of Mr. MacBride they exercise a strong influence in favor of evangelical Christianity and mental culture throughout the whole of the republic.

Bolivia, too, is progressing materially. Her vast territory is being opened up by numerous railways, and in a few years the Bolivian systems will be linked up with those of Brazil and the Argentine, thus giving the country an outlet to the Atlantic. All these railways will have their center in La Paz, the capital, which will then become a large and flourishing city. I think travelers visiting Bolivia for the first time are surprised to find such an up-to-date, go-ahead little city as La Paz hidden away in the interior of South America. La Paz has many fine buildings. There are two or three good "plazas," an "alameda," a museum, public library, and many other interesting places; but what interests the foreigner most is the market. Here may be seen hundreds of Indians and "cholos," dressed in the most fantastic and varied colored costumes, squatting among their wares. Stolid and quiet, they sit like stones, seemingly careless whether they dispose of their stock or no.

THE home is the solution of the Christian Endeavor problem," said speaker. "Let us have Jesus Christ so honored in the home that and girls will think Jesus Christ is well worth while." The spe struck a keynote in the Iowa State Christian Endeavor Conver held in Cedar Rapids, Iowa, June 24 to 27. The program was rich, filled mountain-top experiences for the hundreds of delegates from all parts of State. The mornings were given to conferences, and large attendance showed the intense interest. It was marked how young most of the delegates were. Who tell the mighty influences for time and eternity se motion by such inspiring addresses as those of Presi William Hardcastle; those on the mission fields of world, and China as opportunity, by Dr. W. H. Reherd of Waterloo, Iowa, has just returned from a trip around the world, and that magnificent addr like a great moving picture, by Dr. Joseph K. Greene, the white-haired vete of the Cross, who for more than fifty years has labored in Turkey. He sp on "The Balkans and Missionary Opportunity." Other helpful addre were by Rev. Charles Parsons, who pleaded for "Our Brothers Behind Bars," who reaches more than forty thousand young people in Iowa thro the Society for the Friendless, of which he is superintendent. Chaplain Pi worth of Anamosa came with a message from a Prison Endeavor Soci pleading for the "brotherly, motherly, human touch" for the man that is do but who may be reclaimed for society by Christian sympathy.

Iowa's Christian Endeavor Convention

Rev. Mr. Orvis kept the practical study of the Bible well to the fr Prayer meetings proved mighty blessings, as young people, some perhaps the first time, learned that "The resources of God are for those who atte the program of God." About fifty delegates will go from Iowa to Los Ange for the great national convention. The convention was closed by an addr by Rev. Dr. J. P. Hugget of Detroit. The reports for the various departme were said to be the best in the society's history.

WILLIAM E. GLADSTONE said: "I go to church on Sundays not or because I revere religion, but because I love England." That thoug might apply to patriotic Americans even with added accent duri vacation time. Without sectarian ideas or denominational teaching Gospel meeting is held all the summer months in the unique Boardwalk Chur at Atlantic City. This year—the fifth of the church's existence—services a being conducted each Lord's Day morning in the Bij Theater—a room used usually for moving pictures. Tl Rev. Robert Elwood, a Presbyterian, is the founder a pastor. It is a church without a choir, officer, or sing member and without a collection-plate. The business me of Atlantic City, as well as the visitors, think it wort while and maintain this Gospel lighthouse by the sea. Mr. Elwood says th work was conceived in faith and born of prayer, and the service rendered ha been done for the glory of God. Ninety per cent. of the audience is new each Sur day. Through this preaching as to a procession thousands have been reached and many blessed with the Gospel of Christ in this pleasure-providing city. People gladly turn in from the Boardwalk at the call for worship.

Atlantic City's Boardwalk Church

One man confessed that he had come to Atlantic City with suicide in view, but wandering from the "wooden way" into the Boardwalk Church he heard of Christ, and getting the message he needed he returned home to praise God and to make his life count for things worth while.

The audience is reverent though cosmopolitan. One Sunday morning when a test was made every civilized country was represented in the large congregation, as well as most of the States of the Union. The pastor thinks this fifth year will be the best in spiritual results. He desires prayers for these meetings that God may use them for the benefit of souls and for his glory.

EPTICS—ANCIENT AND MODERN*

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON BY DR. AND MRS. WILBUR F. CRAFTS

BBORN" is the only word by which we can describe the Pharaoh who was upon the throne of ypt when Moses and Aaron appeared before him ch a message from the God of heaven and earth: iith Jehovah, the God of Israel, Let my people go, y may hold a feast unto me in the wilderness." born king replied: "I know not Jehovah, and more- ill not let Israel go." And Pharaoh proceeded to his stubbornness by laying yet harder tasks upon rews, whose burdens were already greater than ld bear. The work assigned them was to mold a number of bricks every day out of clay. Straw was brickmaking in those days as a means of causing ts to dry quickly, and the straw had been furnished ut after Pharaoh had refused to let the Hebrews ld a feast in the wilderness, he proclaimed that they reafter find their own straw, and make no less han before. This was equivalent to doubling their r they must search far and near through the fields he stubble they must use in lieu of the straw. Let fail to recognize that Pharaoh's stubbornness was God as well as the Hebrews, for he declared that v not God, and would not let the people go. Did n mean to say that he had not before heard of the the Hebrews? No, for as a matter of history, and observation, he must have heard much about the om the Hebrews served; he did not know him be- e would not; he had decided against the true God in f the idol gods which he worshiped—Ptah and his f lesser deities. Pharaoh was the most prominent of his time. It is wonderful to consider how long ave been atheists in the world, but it is still more ful to think how little they have accomplished in ng their disbeliefs, for through every cycle the world wn more devoted to the God of the universe.

before Moses had gone in to make the request of h that he would let them go, the people had been ed together, and they had been told by Moses and about the errand God had given them to do, and ad done the three miracles which God had told them efore Pharaoh (Ex. 4: 1-7) and the people had been comforted and had bowed their heads and wor- God. But after Pharaoh had answered "No" to and had given his orders that their work should be , the people cried out against Moses and Aaron and l them much. Then Moses prayed to God about it, od answered him: "Now shalt thou see what I will Pharaoh, for with a strong hand shall he let them d with a strong hand shall he drive them out of d" (Ex. 6: 1). God meant that Pharaoh would yet ious to have the Hebrews leave his realm. It was in thought to break down that unbelief of Pharaoh.

hy doesn't God just make atheists stop thinking that asked a bright boy eleven years of age who lived in where there was a noted atheistic citizen. "Well," red his father, "God has made everybody free to his own thoughts and do his own will." The father n: "I will tell you a story that I heard long ago in a n that was preached by Dr. A. J. Gordon of Boston. ries ago Cyprian, the bishop of Carthage, tells us e was troubled and fell asleep and dreamed that he n an ampitheater. He saw the crowds of people, old oung, rising tier above tier, waiting for the bloody to begin. And then he saw Satan suddenly leap he arena, and lifting his hands exultingly, he cried, ld all these; did not God create them? but they own me ster. Did not Christ redeem them? but they follow stead of him.' But let none of us be deceived by 's lie. A great company is following Satan, but it is ecause he is greater than the God of heaven, but be- men choose darkness rather than light, and death r than life. Neither in the court of conscience nor e court of heaven can any transgressor plead 'not ' because the power of evil was so great that he not resist it." Possibly the boy did not comprehend father had said, but he took in enough to say, "Well, I ot going to blame God for the bad things I do."

Dr. Parker's People's Bible we find: "If God first harden a man's heart and then punish the because his heart was hard, he would act a part which the sense of justice would instantly and indignantly condemn; therefore he could not act that part. Whenever there is on one hand a verbal difficulty, and on the other a moral difficulty, the verbal difficulty must give way. The Lord hardened the hearts of the Israelites just as certainly as he hardened the heart of Pharaoh, and in the very same way, and for the very same reason. See how the Lord treated the Israelites: 'So I gave them up unto their own hearts' lust, and they walked in their own counsels.' The marginal reading is still more vivid: 'I gave them up unto the hardness of their hearts.' That is to say, the divine Teacher must at certain points say, in effect, 'You have made your determination, you must work it out; no reasoning, even on my part, would dissuade you; you must for yourselves, in bitterness and agony of experience, see what this condition of mind really means.' 'So I gave them up unto their own hearts' lust, and they walked in their own counsels'—not as an act of sovereignty, arbitrariness and determination that could not be set aside because of the divinity of its origin, but 'I, the living God, was for their sakes necessitated to let them see how a certain course of conduct must logically and morally end.'"

Let us take this thought as an approach to the Golden Text: "Blessed are they that mourn, for they shall be comforted." It makes a way of escape for us out of the dark tunnel where we sometimes find ourselves as the result of being left to do our own way. Romanes wrote an atheistic book, and there made this acknowledgment: "I am not ashamed to confess that with this virtual negation of God the universe to me has lost its soul of loveliness. . . . When I think of the appalling contrast between the hallowed glory of that creed which once was mine, and the lonely mystery of existence as I now find it, I shall ever find it impossible to avoid the sharpest pang of which my nature is susceptible." He wrote a later book, which was published after his death, in which he avowed himself a Christian, and we must believe that he was comforted.

Sometimes young men and even boys think it very smart to deny their belief in God. Some of these join the Secular League, or announce themselves as "freethinkers" in their college classes, and are very proud of themselves. The following incident contains a good thrust which a Sunday school superintendent or teacher may use: Said a young man, "I don't take any stock in this religious stuff. Nobody believes the people in it. They're all hypocrites, and don't live up to what they profess." In reply his friend said, "What would make you believe you are wrong?" "Well," said he, "if a friend of mine were to die, and be buried three or four years, and then come back and tell me he had seen these things, I'd believe." "Then you believe only what has been seen by yourself or some friend?" "Yes, seeing is believing." "Now, my friend, let me prove you are wrong. I will do it with three questions. You say, 'Seeing is believing.' Did you ever see your brains?" After thinking a moment, the answer came slowly, "No." "Did you ever know a man who had seen your brains?" Again, "No." "Do you believe you have any?" No answer, but his face—such a queer expression! "Well," said his friend, "I believe you have brains by what I see and know you are doing. Just so I believe 'this religious stuff' by the result in the lives of men, for all men are not the kind of which you speak."

Beware of permitting boys to hear the talk of skeptics! A probable purchaser, a rich nobleman, was being shown through the famous Wedgwood potteries in England by the proprietor, and a boy went along to help. The visitor, who was an atheist, made several objectionable remarks about religion. The boy looked puzzled, and then smiled, and finally laughed aloud at some of the sayings. Mr. Wedgwood said nothing, but afterward, when he had shown an exquisite vase to the nobleman, he stretched out his hand and knocked it to the ground, dashing it to pieces. "That was unpardonable carelessness," remarked the nobleman, "for I wished to purchase that for my collection, and nothing can restore it now." "No," replied Mr. Wedgwood; "you forget, my lord, that the soul of the lad who has just left us came innocent into the world; that his parents and friends have used their influence to make him a vessel fit for the Master's use, and that you, with your touch, have undone the work of years." This quite staggered his lordship. The words, however, went home, for, holding out his hand, he exclaimed: "Sir, I beg your pardon. I never thought of the effect of my words."

OUR SUNDAY SCHOOL SUPERINTENDENTS' ROUND TABLE

VE HAVE JUST RAISED $52 with which to se a library for our Sunday school. Will ndly suggest a list of good books suitable e different grades? The children of the Temperance Legion have a good library ning about seventy-five books; with that ion there is no other library in the town mmunity, and but few homes contain books."—N. E. D.

e of the denominational publishing s, Baptist, Presbyterian, etc., issue lists rary books for Sunday schools to use in g their selections, and some of these con- rief descriptions of the books mentioned, t the committee may choose intelligently. hurch Library Association of Cambridge, also publishes lists of books for Sunday libraries. We can not undertake to suggest a complete list of books for Sunday schools, but will name a few: The Pictorial Life of Christ, published by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Company. The pictures in this book are strikingly new—they look like pieces of statuary, and seem all the more like real events for that.

We would recommend several books of short stories, written by O. Henry. They treat of life among those who are called the "submerged class," among which the social workers find so many persons needing the uplift of the Gospel, and "neighborhood houses," and other plans of help. We will name some of these books: The Four Million, miniature masterpieces as rich in humor as any story Dickens ever penned. The Trimmed Lamp, rich in vigorous life and real entertainment. We name three others: Roads of Destiny; Whirligigs; Let Me Feel Your Pulse. The last-named work is said to be a life-line to cheerfulness. (Doubleday, Page & Co., publishers.)

We would also suggest: From Youth to Manhood, by Dr. W. L. Hall, published by the Y. M. C. A. press. Talks to Girls, by Margaret Sangster. There should be at least one book for parents: Hints on Child Training, by Henry Clay Trumbull. And there should be a book for teachers: Teachers and Teaching, by Henry Clay Trumbull. There should be a book of choicest religious poetry. In any town where homes lack libraries a great effort should be made by the church through the Sunday school to furnish books for home reading, and it would be well to establish a church reading-room which would be open at least two nights in a week and oftener if possible.

HAPPY LITTLE WAIFS AT MONT-LAWN

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER, JR.

They come from the dusty city,
To a land that is bright and fair,
And they learn that the God above them
Can shelter, and love, and care.

A GROUP of children were leaving the city by the special trolley that starts from the Bible House. Pale, wan, drooping little children, with strained, hot faces and tiny, claw-like hands. They spoke in awed voices about the country and some of them cried from pure weakness as they clung to the teacher. This was on Friday afternoon.

And I thought of them all through the week-end while the blazing heat waves swept eastward and buried the city in a scorching blast. The babies lifted up their voices unheard; for the mothers, too, were prostrated, and little children tossed feverishly in the close air of the tenement rooms. As a farmer cuts his crops, so the heat mows down its victims—little innocent children who call for the country with their last gasping breath.

On Monday I went to Mont-Lawn, away from the blinding glare of the city to the cool, sweet mountain country that guards the sleepy Hudson; and as I drove slowly through the gate, I was truly in a paradise of children. There were boys and girls everywhere, but although I looked carefully for the children I had seen, it was a long time before I discovered them.

I think that a fairy lives at Mont-Lawn—a fairy who waves a wand over each child, and put sparkle into the eyes and roses into the cheeks, and laughter upon the lips. For three days had certainly worked marvelous changes. The little boys were covered with sunburn, and the palest, droopiest little girls of Friday were the merriest of all on Monday. Dimples ran riot in little faces that were beginning to grow plump, and tan took the place of dirt on the small, busy hands.

It was almost dinner time, but the children were down at the foot of the playground having glorious fun in the small pond. They were sailing boats, tiny affairs, painted in green and yellow and scarlet; and squeals of delight greeted me as I joined them. One little fellow stationed himself at my elbow, and as I looked down into the dancing blue eyes, he winked up at me with a broad grin that wrinkled his absurdly small, stubby nose.

"What is your name, honey?" I asked.

"Patsy," he responded with another broad grin.

"Is this your first year?" was my next question.

"Ah, no, teacher" (Patsy had labeled me), "dis ain't my foist year; but las' year I wasn't so nice. Why," opening his mouth as wide as possible, "dese teeth o' mine all come since then. I didn't have any last year!" and with a parting grin Patsy faded from my horizon.

Then the noises stopped short, and the swinging boats were dropped to the ground, for loud and clear came the clamor of the dinner bell. Two by two the children formed in line and marched to answer its impatient summons. There was no fussing, quarreling, pushing for right of way. Every child marched quietly, happily to his dinner, and entered Fort Plenty with a reverent little air that was charming. Two things I noticed during the meal that surprised me. It seemed strange that children could eat so heartily, and I was astonished to see what good table manners they had. Some of the spoiled daughters of the rich could have learned things from the little Mont-Lawn guests.

One girl, a dusky-eyed, long-lashed little cherub, caught my arm as I passed. Her gaze, surprised and unwavering, was fixed on the plate that had just been piled high by her "teacher." "Lady," she asked, "are they having meat because it's my birthday?"

New children arrived in the afternoon, sixty of them. That is, fifty-nine and Yetta. For Yetta is the delight of the Mont-Lawn ladies; Yetta is in a class by herself. From the moment she arrived, she held the center of the stage, for standing on the lawn she displayed to the admiring and envious gaze of her friend a bracelet fashioned of blue beads.

"My, Yetta, how stylish we are!" said one of the girls, "and what a stunning bracelet!" but Yetta shook her frizzy head until the tight little braids quivered and stood out vertically. "That ain't a bracelet," she informed them, "that's only beads!"

"Oh, no!" said her teacher, "anything that you wear on your arm is a bracelet. If 'tis made out of gold it's a gold bracelet, or silver it's a silver bracelet, but when it's made out of beads—"

Yetta, as she turned away, affected the bored air of a society queen. Her nose would have turned up if possible, but that type of nose does not turn up easily. I was brought back to reality by the rumble of carriage wheels, and I rushed pell mell for my hat and coat. A grieved feeling was in my soul, for I wanted to stay just a little longer. I wanted to see more of the children, and I wanted to see the youngest ones put in Rosemary Nursery. I wanted to know the teachers better, and to hear the little heart stories that mean so much. I knew that the sun was going to set in a short time, and I wanted to see the moon rise over the dark silent mountains and turn the Hudson to a silver glory, while the stars gleamed down with a silent benediction over the three hundred little sleepers. But fate was inexorable; I had to go. As I climbed into the carriage the children grouped themselves around the wheels, and shouted:

"Good-by, lady, come again!" and I called back, and tried to smile away the mist that gathered in my eyes.

So I rode away over the hills, away from the Children's Paradise, back to the dust and heat of the workaday world; but I knew that behind me the breezes were blowing and the river was singing to itself, and the little children were learning the meaning of God's love.

Friends, the midsummer heat of the city this year is doing its deadly work among the ranks of the little ones; but Mont-Lawn, with your aid, is putting new life into many. And as we thank you for the good you have done already, we would tell you that your help is still needed. Send in your gifts this week to the Children's Home, CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York, and you will make me feel that I have not pleaded their cause in vain.

ANSWERED PRAYERS

A FLORIDA reader says: "I wish to acknowledge through your column, to all readers of this paper, God's great goodness in answering prayers. Several times within a few weeks he has answered my prayers, and been an ever-present help and refuge in time of trouble. Would that every one could know what a blessed privilege it is to carry everything to God in prayer." Mrs. P. R., of Waitsburg, Wash., writes: "I wish to say that the Answered Prayer department of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is a great help to me; it strengthens my faith. God has answered my prayers many times, and still in hours of trouble if my faith gets weak it is such a comfort to turn to the Answered Prayer page. It always helps me. I always read it first when the paper comes."

A reader from Ossawatomie, Kan., writes: "I wish to add my testimony to the many others whose prayers have been answered. God has wonderfully blessed us as a family in restoring a daughter to health after undergoing a very serious operation. He gave us strength for the trying ordeal. His promises are sure if we come to him in the right way." A. F. Evans writes from Huntsville, Ala.: "I want to acknowledge answers to my prayers to my gracious heavenly Father in behalf of two children who were dangerously sick. Thanks be to his holy name, they were restored to health again. Oh, give thanks unto the Lord, for his mercy endureth forever!" A. M. G., of Haviland, Kan., writes: "I wish to acknowledge the goodness of God in answering my prayer for the recovery of my son, my only child, to health." A. R. C. writes from Norwich, N. Y.: "The Answered Prayer column is a great help. Recently, I was very much discouraged, and the Lord answered my prayer. Pollyanna also has been a great help, and I know of several who are trying to play the 'Glad Game.'"

A brave letter, with the sad black border that means bereavement, comes from H. H. B., Paris, Ky. This lady writes: "I read each week your Answered Prayers. They have been such a help to me, the last few months, while I was nursing a dear sick husband, who the doctors said would never get well. It was so hard to believe, and I prayed so hard, if it were possible, for God to make him well. I could see him growing weaker, and suffering more each day. Then I knew it was God's will to take him home. Then I prayed he would be spared hard suffering in his last hours, and be conscious, know us and talk to us. God surely answered my prayer. He died without a pain or struggle, and with the happiest smiles he bade me good-by and waved good-by to his children and others at his bedside. He said he was so happy. He hated to leave me, he said, but would be waiting for me. I asked if he was afraid. He said, 'no—there was nothing to fear.'"

Acknowledgments of answers to prayers have also been received from:

What a Difference One Word Makes

By simply saying "Van Camp's" when you order baked beans, this is what you get:

A dish prepared by the ablest chefs.

A dish which has made this kitchen famous, because nobody ever matched it.

Beans nut-like, mellow, whole.

Beans with the fresh oven flavor.

And baked with a sauce which, by its zest, has won millions to Van Camp's.

Van Camp's
BAKED WITH TOMATO SAUCE PORK AND BEANS

"The National Dish"

Their Extra Quality Costs Us $800,000 Yearly

The beans we use are picked out by hand—white, plump, even-sized.

They cost us last year an average price of $2.43 per bushel. There are grades which cost one-third as much.

The sauce is made from whole tomatoes, ripened on the vines. It costs five times what common sauce is sold for.

The baking is done in modern steam ovens, where the steam doesn't touch the beans.

It is done by steam so the beans may be baked without crisping or bursting, yet baked to mellowness.

The tomato sauce is baked into the beans, so every atom shares this sparkling zest.

Why We Do It

We bake beans of this grade because millions expect them.

Van Camp's gave users a new conception of baked beans, and we are compelled to fulfill it.

It costs on our output $800,000 yearly more than some grades would cost. But users of Van Camp's get a superlative dish, instead of the commonplace.

Summer Meals

These ready-cooked meals, which everyone likes, help housewives out in summer.

But don't, for your folks' sake, merely order baked beans. Specify Van Camp's Pork and Beans.

Do this once at least. Then let the dish itself decide your future orders.

Three sizes: 10, 15 and 20 cents per can

the collecting, spreading and mastering of missionary information. We have learned that inspiration and earnestness are not enough. We must know what we are about. And new information awakens new inspiration.

Dr. Nicholson, of the Methodist Episcopal Education Board, has delivered on a number of occasions a remarkable sermon on the place of the emotions in the religious life. He points out that all that is needed to awaken sufficient emotion to make religion aggressive is to recognize the facts about sin. Then he goes on in a simple matter-of-fact way to relate some actual instance of the misery and anguish and havoc wrought by sin. He stirs his audience most profoundly and sends them out with a new determination to fight sin and spread salvation.

So all we need to make us enthusiastic in missionary endeavor is to know the facts of the conditions of the people who are living without the knowledge of Jesus. Send, for instance, if you have not already done so, for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD'S tract about Little Hai Ieh Tsi, "the Abused Leaf." You will have some brand new emotions about China and the whole world of missionary work.

People who have not dipped into the modern missionary literature have no conception of its intense interest. There is no more romantic story than the story of modern missions. It is full of the romance of courage, danger, sacrifice, and victory.

The Student Volunteer Movement, the Missionary Education Movement (formerly the Young People's Missionary Movement), the Young People's department of one or two of the leading Missionary Boards, all these organizations are eager to help young people's societies and Sunday schools to secure the best modern missionary books, and to give advice about the forming of Mission Study classes and other plans for using the books sent.

There are good missionary periodicals, too, and many of the religious papers devote large space to missionary information.

Women and Home Missions*

THE story of the part women have had in the development and the conquests of Home Missions in the United States is thrilling and inspiring. For the red man, for the negro, for the pioneer preachers, for the poor, for the outcast, for the children —the noble women of our churches have toiled, collecting and distributing funds, sending their representatives to do the actual work on the fields, often toiling themselves, finding time in the midst of household cares to carry help and the Gospel message to those who are in need.

Our Scripture lesson tells the story of the women of the ancient camp of Israel, who helped to rear the tabernacle of Jehovah, working and sacrificing to complete the work Moses had directed to be done. They "did spin with their hands" and brought their work to those who were preparing the tabernacle. It was done cheerfully. They "brought a willing offering unto the Lord, every man and woman whose heart made them willing."

That was a beautiful picture, and it is a beautiful picture to-day to see the brave women of the American churches making sacrifices of money and time and strength for the cause of Christ in the home land. Churches are to be built in out-of-the-way places; the ignorant and vicious are to be instructed and saved; orphans and widows are to be cared for. In all these things the women have a part which only they can do. It is a work that pays well.

Her Beauty Has "Palmolive Protection"

THE modern girl subjects her complexion to extreme tests. She is out in the sun, the wind and the rain. She takes long motor trips over dusty highways. Yet she keeps her skin soft, smooth and beautiful.

Palmolive protects her complexion. She knows that famous beauties, 2,000 years ago, used Palm and Olive oils, and that nothing else since has been found to surpass them. She knows that these oils soothe irritations.

She knows we blend them into Palmolive by our own process, which greatly increases their efficiency.

Palmolive is more than mere soap. Hard milling makes it lasting and economical. 15 cents a cake.

B. J. Johnson Soap Company, Inc., Milwaukee, Wis.
Canadian Factory: 153-157 George St., Toronto, Ont.

PALMOLIVE SHAMPOO makes the hair lustrous and healthy and is excellent for the scalp. It rinses out easily and leaves the hair soft and tractable. Price, 50 cents.

WE INVITE EVERY THIN MA and WOMAN HER

Every Reader Who is Run Down, Nervous, Or Ten Pounds or Over Underweight, To Gain Health and Flesh at Our Expense

Come, Eat With Us at Our Expense

THIS is an invitation that no thin man or woman can afford to ignore. We invite you to try a new treatment called "Sargol" that helps digest the food you eat—that puts good solid flesh on people that are thin and underweight.

How can "Sargol" do this? We will tell you. This new treatment is a scientific, assimilative agent. It increases cell growth, the very substance of which your bodies are made—puts red corpuscles in the blood, which every thin person so sadly needs, strengthens the nerves and puts the digestive tract in such shape that every ounce of food gives out its full amount of nourishment to the blood instead of passing through the system undigested and unassimilated.

Women who never appear stylish in anything they wore because of their thinness, men under weight or lacking in nerve force or energy, tell how they have been made to enjoy the pleasures of life—been fitted to fight life's battles, as never for years, through the use of "Sargol."

If you want a beautiful and well rounded figure of which you can justly be proud—a body full of throbbing life and energy, write the Sargol Co., 9G Herald Building, Binghamton, N. Y., to-day, for 50c box "Sargol," absolutely free, and use with every meal.

But you say that you want proof! Well, here you are. Here is the statement of those who have tried, been convinced, and will swear to the virtues of this preparation:

CLAY JOHNSON says:

"Please send me another ten-day treatment. I am well pleased with Sargol. It has been the light of my life. I am getting back to my proper weight again. When I began to take Sargol I only weighed 138 pounds, and now, four weeks later, I am weighing 153 pounds and feeling fine."

MRS. A. I. RODENHEISER writes:

"I have gained immensely since I took Sargol, for I only weighed about 106 pounds when I began using it and now I weigh 130 pounds, so really this makes 24 pounds. I feel stronger and am looking better than ever before, and now I carry rosy cheeks, which is something I could never say before.

My old friends, who have been used to seeing me with a thin, long face, say that I am looking better than they have ever seen me before, and father and mother are so well pleased to think I have got to look so well and weigh so heavy for me."

F. GAGNON writes:

"Here is my report since taking the Sargol treatment: I am a man 67 years of age and was all run down to the very bottom. I had to quit work, as I was so weak. Now, thanks to Sargol, I look like a new man. I gained 22 pounds with 26 days' treatment. I cannot tell you how happy I feel. All my clothes are getting too tight. My face has a good color and I never was so happy in my life."

MRS. VERNIE ROUSE says:

"Sargol is certainly the grandest treatment I ever used. It has helped me greatly. I could hardly eat anything and was not able to sit up three days out of a week, with stomach trouble. I took only two boxes of Sargol and can eat anything, and it doesn't hurt me and I have no more headache. My weight was 120 pounds, and now I weigh 140 and feel better than I have for five years. I am now as fleshy as I want to be, and shall certainly recommend Sargol, for it does just exactly what you say it will do."

You may know some of these people or know somebody who knows them. We will send you their full address if you wish, so that you can find out all about Sargol and the wonders it has wrought.

Probably you are now thinking whether all this can be true. Stop it! Write us at once and we will send you absolutely free a 50c package of Sargol. Sargol makes thin folks fat; but we don't ask you to take our word for it. Simply cut the coupon below and inclose 10c in stamps to help cover the distribution expenses, and Uncle Sam's mail will bring you this 50c box Free.

50c Package FREE Coupon

THIS COUPON entitles any thin person to one 50c package of Sargol, the concentrated Flesh Builder (provided you have never tried it and that 10c is enclosed to cover postage, packing, etc.). Read our advertisement printed above and then put 10c in stamps in letter to-day, with this coupon, and the full 50c package will be sent to you by return of post. SARGOL IS SAFE

After an exhaustive analysis of samples I found they contained no Morphine, Opium, Cocaine, Mercury, nor any Narcotic or Poisonous ingredients. In my opinion Sargol contains the best elements to accomplish what is claimed for it. Sargol is a superior preparation. I recommend Sargol as a safe Vitalizer and Flesh Builder.

Questions and Answers

Mrs. A. M. S., Murtaugh, Idaho. We have a logical arrangement of the principles of Christianity which is creedless. Could we further the cause by organizing the younger members into companies of Boy Scouts?

While not wishing to discourage any movement for the uplift of any community, it seems to us that the plan you have suggested is hardly likely to bring the best results. If your organization is connected with a church, there is no advantage in its being "creedless." A creed is simply a statement of belief or faith. A Christian ought to be able to state promptly and emphatically what he believes, for Christian experience and, indeed, the whole Christian church, rests upon faith. There are a number of organizations for boys, such, for instance, as the Knights of King Arthur, that have a definite basis of Christian faith on which a splendid plan of work and sport is built. The Boy Scouts are an excellent organization, but when incorporated into church activities, Bible study, devotional exercises, etc., should be added to their regular provisions.

M. B., Holland, Mich. 1. Humming is a habit with some people and not a pleasing one, although we fail to see the logic of the pastor you name as denouncing it as sinful. It is absurd, childish and annoying, however, and that ought to be sufficient to make it unpopular. Some teachers of vocal music hold that it injures the natural voice. 2. The passage in Ezek. 4 refers to what is still commonly dried and used as fuel in many places in the East. 3. The passage in II Kings 5: 27 implies that Gehazi, the wicked servant, was completely smitten with leprosy as a punishment for his sin of covetousness and lying.

J. J. B., Seneca, S. D. All the information we have in Scripture concerning the population of the earth before the Flood is contained in Gen. 4 to 6. It is made clear in Gen. 5: 4 that Adam had a numerous progeny. Jewish tradition says he had 33 sons and 23 daughters. There must have been intermarriages. This is the view generally accepted by commentators, as the only reasonable explanation, where no other light can be had on the subject.

Mrs. W. J., Brooklyn, N. Y. 1. There are many passages in Scripture implying the existence of another world. See Matt. 12: 32; Mark 10: 30; Luke 18: 30; Luke 20: 35; Eph. 1: 21 and the well-known passage in John 14: 2. 2. No such passage in the Bible. 3. "Heaven" is used in various senses: It may mean the upper air, the starry firmament or the divine dwelling-place. The Jews held that there were three heavens, two of them beyond the stars, and Paul speaks of being caught up into the "third heaven." The word "heavens" is sometimes applied to the upper air or the sky. The ultimate "heaven" of Scripture is the future abode of the blessed, where no care nor pain nor sorrow can enter, where we shall be with Christ and reunite with those friends who have gone before us (I Peter 1: 8; I Thess. 4: 17).

J. D. S., Moorefield, W. Va. The "lost tribes," so-called, were the Jews carried into captivity by Shalmaneser (II Kings 17: 6), and chiefly belonging to Israel or the ten tribes. Many theories as to their location and their descendants have been ventilated, and they have been successively located (by ingenious investigators) in Hindustan, Tartary, China, Africa, Great Britain and among the aborigines of North America. More reasonable conjectures hold that while some returned after the exile, and others were left in Samaria, many remained in Assyria and afterward joined with the Jews in forming colonies throughout the East, so that, in a certain sense, they shared the ultimate history of their brethren of Judah.

L. H. M., Greensboro, Ga. A number of denominations have educational boards which grant loans to worthy young people desiring an education, particularly to those fitting themselves for the ministry, the missionary field or other forms of Christian work. Write to the headquarters of your own denomination for particulars.

H. G., Selhysport, Md. Should the Christian work for the reward or should he work because of love for the Master and what Christ has done for him?

The New Testament makes it very clear that the motive of our work should be love for Christ, love that springs from gratitude for his salvation. But the Christian is also reminded of the great rewards that shall come to him in the future life if he is faithful and if his work is of a high order. Study particularly I Cor. 3: 11-15. The thought of these rewards helps us to be faithful, constant, and careful. The conception of what the rewards will be varies with different stages of civilization. The best idea of these rewards seems to be that every good deed done is in itself the reward. Somebody was helped, was saved, was made glad, was given power and inspiration for helping others; these facts are eternal, and will bless forever those who are responsible for them. Then, too, the reward implies power to do still greater things. If there is joy in accomplishing things for the Master now there will be greater joy when we find ourselves furnished with the new, heavenly powers for doing still greater service. But more and more the Christian should train himself to keep his eyes and his heart fixed on Christ, eager to please him. He has called us into his friendship, into his fellowship, into co-operation with him in his great tasks. We must not disappoint him.

N. B., Youngstown, Ohio. Mr. Moody prayed, while living, that Wm. A. Sunday might become one of the younger men whom God should raise to carry forward the revival fire. In a most wonderful way God is answering that prayer, and by him literally shaking the stronghold of evil.

The seven weeks' revival in South Bend, Ind., closing with over 6,000 confessions of saving faith, attest the remarkable work that is being conducted under Mr. Sunday's direction. We give the figures in another part of this issue. However people may critioize his methods, or his collections, it is unquestionable that he is made instrumental in producing startling results.

I. J. G., Lawrence, Kan. It is the duty of a journal, in recording the news, to give it impartially. If the record in the case in question had led to any other verdict we would have given it equal prominence. Your criticism, though well meant, should be applied to the court and not to the paper that simply records the fact.

Mrs. J. C. P., Dallas, N. C., sends a plea for the better care of rural cemeteries. She writes: "They are principally donated by the different denominations for public use; but whose place is it to care for them? I'm in a little village where the church grounds are used just like a public cemetery, yet the public does not see that it is its duty to keep up the Presbyterian grounds or the Methodist grounds." In most villages or townships there is a cemetery association, which undertakes the care of the local burying ground. This is so clearly a local duty that it does not need to be discussed. There should be sufficient public spirit in the district to provide for the general care of the cemetery (if there is not a cemetery association), and it could be done by assessment or voluntary contribution.

L. B., Midland, Mich. 1. Sunday is dies non in a legal sense. Consult a lawyer as to the specific contract in question. 2. All we know of the millennium is what is revealed in Scripture. Beyond this, it is simply conjecture. Read the Exposition on Revelation by Rev. J. B. Knappenberger, Syracuse, N. Y. 3. The Bible clearly says: "The soul that sinneth, it shall die." (Ezek. 18: 4.)

W. W. O., Berthaville, Va. Some denominations still have what is known as "close communion." Now, however, a majority of the churches of nearly all denominations welcome to the Lord's table their fellow Christians of other churches, who may happen to worship with them at that time.

AMERICAN EXCAVATORS AT WORK AT SARDIS; THE NECROPOLIS IN THE DISTANCE

THE SEVEN CHURCHES OF ASIA

*SARDIS, THE BURIED CITY

BY REV. FRANCIS E. CLARK, D.D., LL.D.

Founder and President of the Christian Endeavor Society

OF ALL the Seven Cities of Asia, perhaps Sardis has the most interesting and romantic history, and yet, with all its natural advantages, its wealth, its famous rulers, its wise counselors, its victorious armies, it was the greatest failure of them all, and its church merited the severest reprimand from the Revelator of any of its sisters. The richest man in the world, Crœsus, had been the king of Sardis; the wisest man, Solon, had been her guest, and yet, as we shall later see, through over-confidence and lack of watchfulness, time and again it was surprised, conquered, and all but destroyed, until at last the disintegrating rock and soil from its own citadel, loosened by the winter rains, and hurled down by destructive earthquakes, buried the city thirty feet deep from the sight of man.

It became a dead city, and it was buried by the forces of nature. The church in Sardis seems to have shared the characteristics of the city. It, too, was dead, as we are told, and apparently through lack of watchful care, for twice over practically the same message comes to it: "Be watchful. . . . If, therefore, thou shalt not watch, I will come on thee as a thief, and thou shalt not know what hour I will come upon thee." This interesting correspondence between the history of the city of Sardis and the message to the church of Sardis will be understood as the story of the city is developed.

Sardis was a very old city, far older than Thyatira or Pergamos, or even Ephesus. More than three thousand years ago it was a great city. Before the dawn of recorded time it was very likely inhabited, at least as a robber stronghold, for its original situation made it seemingly impregnable, and enabled it to lay all the country round about under tribute. But the day of its greatest glory and splendor did not come until about twenty-five hundred years ago, when Crœsus became its king. He was the more famous son of a famous father, Alyattes. He conquered all the people of Asia, the province, and reigned in unparalleled magnificence in his splendid capital.

THE COLUMNS OF THE TEMPLE OF CYBELE

Sardis, which had at first been merely the citadel on a steep and almost inaccessible plateau, fifteen hundred feet above the plains, had by this time moved down from its lofty perch to the valley below, and palaces and temples and gymnasia and magnificent private homes made it a metropolis to be spoken of with wonder and respect by all the peoples of the world.

Crœsus, first of all the kings of antiquity, minted gold and silver coins, which were an interchangeable medium of exchange both in the East and the West, from Babylonia to Greece. Thus by his shrewdness he became the banker of the Occident and the Orient. But he was not satisfied with his possessions or glory, and so set out to conquer the Persians. He apparently gave little heed to Solon, the wise man of Athens, who visited him in Sardis, and told him to esteem no man happy till he was dead and his record fully made up. He consulted the Delphic oracle of Greece, and received the answer which to him seemed to be reassuring, that "if he crossed the Halys he would destroy a mighty empire." Full of assurance of his own resistless might, he did cross the Halys, and a great empire was destroyed, but it was not the empire of Cyrus the Persian, but of Crœsus the Lydian. After his first victory, Cyrus followed it up by boldly attacking Sardis the impregnable. His soldiers, one by one, by digging their toes into the cracks of the rocks, climbed up the almost perpendicular slope of the acropolis, on the side which was thought to be absolutely unscalable and was hence left unguarded, and to the amazement of the Lydian capital and the surprise of the whole world, Sardis was taken, its multi-millionaire king was a prisoner, and the lingering death of the proud city had begun.

It had revivals, to be sure, as well as reverses, but it never regained the eminence that it enjoyed in the palmy days of Crœsus, and when St. John wrote the Revelation it was decadent and decaying, and the church was apparently sharing the fate of the city.

Three centuries after the defeat of Crœsus the city again suffered the same fate through carelessness and over-confidence, for Antiochus surprised and captured it from its reigning king Achæus in the same way that the soldiers of Cyrus had done, by stealing into the fortifications, after scaling what was believed to be the unscalable mountain side. Sardis had learned nothing by the experience of the past, and still needed the warning word, "Be watchful." Upon the later history of Sardis we need not dwell. It was a city of considerable importance in the Byzantine times. Its citadel was again a robber fastness in the early Mohammedan rule, but it is now absolutely dead, deserted and buried, or was until recent American excavators brought its temples and its tombs again to the light of day.

Yet among all the cities that I have visited I know of none which, even in its deadness and desolation, is of more thrilling interest to the modern traveler. We leave the Ottoman Railway at Sardes, as it is called in the time table, or Sart, as the Turks call it, 124 kilometers (about 75 miles) from Smyrna. There is absolutely nothing to remind us at first sight that there was ever a great city with its teeming population in this vicinity. Few ruins are seen, and those of a comparatively modern date, as we follow the valley of the little Pactolus for a mile or more from the railway station. A few ruins of ancient buildings with enormously thick walls are passed, and also a few miserable huts, made of mud or reeds, and occupied by Yuruks, the wandering nomads of this country. The little Pactolus gurgles over its rocky bed on its way to join the Hermus, and the whole scene is one of desolation and untamed nature. Scarcely can the furrow of a plow be seen in any direction as one approaches ancient Sardis. The beautiful anemones and other wild flowers add their grace to the scene, but there are no touches of man's embellishment.

DR. CLARK AND DR. RIGGS VISITING A NOMAD'S HUT AT SARDIS

At last, after walking about a mile, two tall pillars loom upon the sight, and we know that we are approaching the ancient temple of Cybele, or Artemis, as it is called by more modern explorers. As we draw still nearer, a busy scene presents itself to our eyes. Two hundred workmen and more are industriously digging in a deep hollow. A busy little tramway loaded with gravel and loam runs down a slight descent toward the Pactolus by force of gravity, while the empty trucks are pushed back by the sturdy Turkish workmen. Half a dozen American scholars and archeologists and engineers, under leadership of Professor Butler of Princeton, are directing the operation. An eighth of a mile away, under the frowning acropolis of old, stands the comfortable house and temporary museum, built by these American archeologists for their occupancy during the year that will

THE WITHERED HAND

*A SERMON BY REV. A. H. TUTTLE, D.D.

TEXT: "And he entered into the synagogue; and there was a man there which had a withered hand." Mark 3: 1

DID you ever see a withered hand? The flesh shriveled, the bones contracted, the skin colored like a dried leaf, the fingers and whole hand curled in upon the wrist like burned parchment? A pitiful and repulsive thing is a withered hand, and as useless as it is repulsive. And it is all the more so because of the place the hand holds in the make of a man. It is the hand that distinguishes a man from all other creatures. It is the principal organ of feeling. Without this organ man could never have achieved his conquests in the realm of nature. Galen calls it the instrument of instruments. Our twentieth century civilization would have been impossible without the hand. Considering its multiplex and masterful efficacy, Cicero's celebrated eulogy is in no measure overdone.

What member of the body holds a more conspicuous place in the symbolism of the Bible? The right hand is power; the extended hand is welcome; washed hands signify innocence; hands full of blood mean cruelty; clean hands denote purity of life. With such significance of these members, a most natural and suggestive form of worship is the uplifted and clasped hands.

But if the healthful hand means beauty, power, worship, a withered hand means deformity, weakness, uselessness. A man with a withered hand is a divinity dethroned. I ask again, did you ever see a withered hand, as on this occasion in Capernaum, in God's house on God's day? Look at your hands and ask the question. There are hands within hands. Paul says there is a natural body and there is a spiritual body. It is just possible that within that beautiful hand that nature has given you there is a hand spiritual, all withered and useless. We will consider the cause and the cure of withered spiritual hands.

The Cause

The withering of the hand denotes paralysis resulting from the absence of vital juices, a condition which is commonly described as atrophy. It is a waste from a want of healthy nutrition. Its causes are many, but three of which I will name.

1. Disuse. An organ that will not exercise itself in the line of its true functions shrivels. The eyeless fish in the Mammoth Cave are a familiar instance. The once living eyes, through protracted idleness, lost the power of vision, and finally the organ disappeared altogether. It is a well-known fact that parasitic plants and animals, that make other living organisms do the work that they themselves ought to do, lose their own organs. Some of you have shuddered at Professor Drummond's description of the Sacculina, a minute organism frequently found in the hermit-crab. Nature destined it to be a Nauplius, having all the organs of an independent life in the sea. But with the pauper spirit of a parasite it imbedded itself in the crab and sucked its nourishment from it. Its own members, unused, dropped off, and now its glorious destiny is lost in a disgusting degenerate, so unlike its original self as to lose its ancient name. Instead of rejoicing in ocean billows, its world is the belly of a crab.

The stylite who by will refuses to use his uplifted arm, by and by cannot use it; for by the law of inaction the flesh hardens and the joints stiffen. The brains of many imbeciles are found to be withered. The glands that will not secrete their juices wither away.

What is true of the physical organs is also true of the higher organs, such as memory, imagination, will. The laws of memory are attention, association and repetition. But the most effective way to preserve this faculty is to persistently exercise it. Force it, as the musician forces his fingers to manipulate the keys, and it will yield to your will and soon act automatically. It is so, also, with the imagination. Instance Darwin, who confessed with sorrow that in the last decades of his life he could not read Shakespeare, who, in his early years, gave him great delight. His mind had become a great machine, grinding out general laws from masses of fact; and in that process the imaginative faculty had perished. It was a sacrifice made upon the altar of science. It is so with the will. Remember Coleridge's opium habit. How the will to master it withered in frequent and long inexercise! How sad his lament!

> Oh woeful impotence of weak resolve,
> Recorded rashly to the writer's shame:
> Days pass away, and Time's large orbs revolve,
> And every day beholds me still the same.
> Till oft-neglected purpose loses aim,
> And hope becomes a flat unheeded lie.

This same resistless law holds in the realm spiritual. The spiritual hand through disuse withers. Oh, how many there are who, like this poor sufferer, are mingling with the worshipers in the house of God with withered hands: hands never stretched out to snatch wicked men as brands from the burning, never held out with open palms in lavish generosity, never pouring the balm of healing on wounded hearts, never placed under the heavy loads that crush weary shoulders, hands that bring no offerings of righteousness or rescued souls to God's altar. Beware of atrophy.

2. A second occasion of withered organs is obstruction. If there should come, as often does, a foreign growth which presses on and cramps a healthful organ, that organ will endeavor to retreat and wither to fit its place, and so fail to do well its function. Men of fine intellects, when confined in cells without books or companions, have become idiots. Minds, without the supply of proper nutriment, withered.

Spiritual paresis comes in the same way. Business, pleasure, anything that obstructs the supply of divine food, will surely result in the ruin of the divine faculty. An absorbing ambition, an unholy love, haste to be rich, will become cancerous growths in the souls of careless men, obstructing the flow of nourishing substance to the hand, and it, unfed, shrivels into the repulsive and useless thing it is.

There is a paralysis that comes slowly, so slowly as to conceal its character. We think that we are only weak or getting old; but it is the slow withering of organs. Beware of spiritual paresis.

3. A third cause of the paralysis of any organ is disease of the nervous center. The nervous center of the hand is, I believe, somewhere in the spinal cord. Touch that point and the hand will close like a vise or hang limp as a rag. That center in any way fevered or impaired, may result in just such a pitiful thing as that poor man's hand in the synagogue.

The chief reason that there are so many withered hands spiritual in the house of God to-day is that the nerve center is impaired. Here in the deeps where are the hidings of his power, where the secret of the Lord is revealed to them that fear him; here where faith lifts up prevailing prayer, here is the spring of heavenly activity. Let that center in any way be impaired by doubt, or fear, or laziness, or jealousy, or bitterness, and the divine organ thus diseased will reveal itself in withered hands.

The Cure

It was a happy thing for that afflicted man that he came into the synagogue that Sabbath day; for the Lord was there able to cure. To him a withered hand in God's house on God's day and in the presence of God's Son seemed altogether out of the divine order, a thing that ought not to be, a wrong that should be righted.

He is here in this house of God this holy day, and both able and willing to cure. Would you have your withered hand restored? Then listen. He speaks just two things for you. Obey and you are healed.

1. "Rise up and stand forth." Jesus called the man before the people. Why? Partly for the people themselves. He wished to point a great truth. So when the man stood forth he who knew the people were watching him lest he should treat the sufferer on the Sabbath day, asked: "Is it law do good or to do evil, to save life or to kill?" I a question that carried with it the force affirmation. We have slain the man who pe through our neglect. Not to do, carries the gu a positive wrong. But the chief purpose of Je calling the man to the fore and keeping him ing there through the protracted discussion for the sake of the man himself. The very s standing there was helpful in preparing hin the work of the Lord. It is very possible that long and hopeless affliction he had lost eve wish to be healed. There was certainly not en of desire to prompt him to ask a cure. The wil lost in his despair. In such instances Jesus sought to awaken men to a sense of their need.
asked the impotent man at the pool: "Wilt tho made whole?" It was not a needless question in the long years of a hopeless impotence his also had become impotent. The will must firs aroused, for it is through it that the divine hea is to flow into the body. Where unbelief confro our Lord he did not many mighty works.

While the man stood in the synagogue listenin the discussion that started about himself, he doing considerable thinking. There was he searching, sifting of conscience, deep questio possibly doubts and fears, certainly an awake and deepening desire. It was a trying time him in which his will was sorely tested. Many other man would have sat down, his patience hausted. Or he would have fled from the hous sheer shame of the publicity to which he had subjected. In either case he would not have cured, for the will of the suppliant must mov

Jesus' miracles were not merely works of a

Do the Impossible

DAILY MEDITATION

FOR EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR

BY REV. J. H. JOWETT, D.D.

SUNDAY, July 27. Psalm 34: 9-22. "Many are the afflictions of the righteous: but the Lord delivereth him out of them all." Samuel Rutherford used to say that whenever he found himself in the cellars of afflictions he used to look about for the King's wine. He would ook for the wine-bottles of the promises and drink rich draughts of vital- ng grace. And surely that is the best deliverance in all affliction, to be ade so spiritually exhilarant that we can rise above it. I might be taken t of affliction and emerge a poor slave and weakling. I might remain affliction, and yet be king in the seeming servitude, "more than con- ieror" in Christ Jesus. It is a great thing to be led through green pas- res and by still waters: I think it is a greater thing to have a "table epared before me in the presence of mine enemies." It is good to be ble to sing in the sunny noon: it is better still to be able to sing "songs in e night."

And this deliverance may always be sure in Christ Jesus. The Lord ay not smooth out our circumstances, but we may have the regal might peace. He may not save us from the sorrows of a newly-cut grave, but e may have the glorious strength of the immortal hope. God will enable s to be masters of all our circumstances, and none shall have a deadly old upon us. Even the circumstances which seem to be our tyrants shall e our slaves. "Kings shall bow down before thee." "Thou shalt suck ie breasts of kings": and thou shalt know that the Lord is thy Saviour id thy Redeemer," "the mighty One of Jacob."

MONDAY, July 28. Psalm 105: 23-36. "They showed his signs among them." That is the wonder of wonders, that the Almighty God will use frail humanity as the vehicles of his power, and will make Moses and Aaron shine with reflected glory. Man can send n electric current into a fragile carbon film and make it incandescent. le can send his voice across a continent and make it speak on a distant iore. The Lord God can do wonders compared with which these are ut dreams. He can send his holy power into human speech, and the words an wake the dead. He can send his virtue into the human will, and its trength can shake the throne of iniquity. He can send his love into the uman heart, and the power of its affection can capture the bitterest foe.

And so the word "impossible" becomes itself impossible when the soul of ian is in fellowship with the Lord of hosts. The pliant will become an ron pillar. The weak heart becomes "as a defended city" when it is the ome of God. Dumb lips become the thrones of mysterious eloquence vhen touched with divine inspiration.

And what cannot be done with endowments such as these? The "impos- ible" becomes the certain. The steepest hill becomes as a level road. The thing impossible shall be." The stiffest height shall be climbed. God's will shall be done.

TUESDAY, July 29. Exodus 7: 1-13. "Aaron's rod swallowed up their rods." The man of God is always distinguished from the men of the world. If he is only an empty professor of the faith, a mere counterfeit believer, he will be like a thin lath, "painted to ook like iron," and in the day of tempest he will stand revealed But a eal man of God needs no label. He is recognized by his strength in the lay of shame, he is known by his serenity in the hour of fear. There is something awe-inspiring in his very presence, and evil men feel it. When ie comes into a room the atmosphere is changed and cunning things find t hard to breathe. There is a mysterious "plus" about him, something which distinguishes every soul which is in fellowship with God.

The church of Christ should have the distinction of Aaron. There should be an authority in her words which makes them spirit and life. Her rod should swallow up the rods of all competitors. But alas! her rod can lose its spiritual magic! It can become a mere toy, a thing of common wood, and the Pharaohs of the earth are not startled by its presence. What a rod the church might wield against the tyranny of oppression, against the vice of drunkenness, against every form of vested wickedness! In only one way can she obtain that rod: she must seek communion with "the stem of Jesse's rod," and in fellowship with the Christ she will become invincible.

WEDNESDAY, July 30. Exodus 8: 25-32. One vice always provides food for another vice. Pharaoh's tyranny fed and strengthened Pharaoh's deceit. Falsehood came easier just because he was cruel. So is it with every kind of vice. All sins form a gloomy fellowship, pledged like conspirators to help one another. Pride and envy feed each other. Jealousy and cruelty go hand in hand. Avarice has a whole brood of vices in her company, all drinking their life from the mother-vice. No sin ever travels unattended and alone. No sin lives unto itself. It seeks and makes an ungodly communion.

How vigilant, then, I must be in guarding against the beginnings of sin! Especially must I watch when sin comes to me in the mood and garb of innocence. An evil passion can approach me playful as a lion's cub. Avarice can wear the skin of economy. Pride can pretend to be self-esteem. Jealousy can presume it is only legitimate self-defense. Every sin has a large wardrobe of deceptive skins, and unless we are wide awake we shall be deceived.

"Lord, that I may receive my sight!" That must be our prayer, that God will give unto us the power of clear discernment, that we may know the difference between the holy and the profane.

THURSDAY, July 31. Exodus 9: 23-35. "When Pharaoh saw that the rain and the hail and the thunder were ceased, he sinned yet more." Pharaoh never hated his sin, he only feared the results of it. He did not shrink from defilement but from punishment. He loved wickedness, but he was afraid of judgment. So that when the terror passed out of his sky he turned again to sin. His moral senses were perverted. His conscience was asleep.

Who among us can pronounce condemnation upon Pharaoh as though he stood alone in his moral benumbment? Have not all of us feared the consequences of sin more than the sin itself? We have loved the taste of the sin but we dreaded the penalties. We should often have walked in the fellowship of Satan but we shrank from the hail and thunder of God. Sickness has sometimes made us thoughtful. Calamity has now and again "pulled us up." The death of a comrade has made us pause. But when the dark season has passed we "sinned yet more."

The only secure relationship to sin is to hate it. If we had a clean moral palate sin would taste to us like putrid meat. We should recoil from it with horror. This clean, sweet mouth is the gift of God. "Create within me a clean heart, and renew a right spirit within me."

FRIDAY, August 1. Exodus 10: 21-29. "There was a darkness over the land of Egypt." And if we knew it, darkness is always the penalty of sin. It sometimes seems as if sin introduced us into light and pleasure and liberty. This is the deception of the devil. He lights a flare and calls it day, when in reality the light of day has faded away. The only daylight worthy of the name is the radiance of open communion with God, and sunshine of his favor and grace. If this goes we are the children of darkness, stumbling about in the night.

Whenever we sin we destroy the light. The heavenly brightness fades from the hills. The sacred halo is eclipsed. Life loses the jewels from its crown. But when we do the will of the Lord the Morning Star shines in our souls and we know the joy of the dawn. We become "the children of light," illumined by our Father's grace, and radiating the pure beams of truth and holiness. The choice is our own—light or darkness, a passage into gloom or a passage into morning!

O Lord, mercifully grant unto us the aid of thy Holy Spirit, that in his power we may become partakers of "the inheritance of the saints in light."

SATURDAY, August 2. Exodus 11. "Yet will I bring one plague more upon Pharaoh." We should have thought that the first plague would have been enough, and that the tyranny of Pharaoh would have ceased. But how many plagues do we need before we turn our feet into the ways of truth? Let no one cast a stone at Pharaoh: our own obstinacy is just as persistent. We have seen the misery occasioned by sin: all the ruin and disaster. History gives her loud witness. The daily paper is filled with the dark record. Our own conscience shouts its warning. Our own experience tells the story. We have had plague after plague. And yet we go on sinning as though yesterday gave no counsel.

Thank God for the "one plague more." Thank God for another hornet to sting us into the way of holiness! Thank God for his repeated antagonisms, for his multiplied goads! God is so merciful that he repeats his plagues. He is so holy that he will not leave us in our sins. If he cannot woo us out of sin, he seeks to drive us out with the point of the sword. If the sunshine will not allure us he tries fire! There is great mercy in his severity: his sword is dipped in heaven. The plagues of Egypt were the ministers of holiness, and thus they were also the ministers of grace.

MAKING THE BLESSINGS GO AROUND

IT SEEMS selfish to enjoy one's own blessings when there aren't enough to go around among one's fellow beings," remarked the -faced man.

But that's just the way to make ı go around," explained the cheer- man.

ow true this is! We cannot help rs by being unhappy. Often the way by which we can lighten r burdens is to be cheerful our- es; for thus we may inspire them ı new courage and strengthen r hearts. Men fall among the ves of hurry and worry and envy strife, which rob them of their happiness and leave them wounded and half dead. Then some good Samaritan with a bright, hopeful face comes along and pours into those wounds the oil of sympathy and the wine of good cheer, and sets the discouraged ones upon their feet and helps them to go on their way again.

Bishop Quayle tells of a brave soul who, even during her own great physical suffering, was an inspiration to others. For weeks her weary head had not touched the pillow. Her breath came in spasms. Yet her face was as bright as if the morning light, untouched by a cloud, was shining there.

Her welcome was full of cheer. She said: "Yesterday I was feeling my way around the room," (for she was blind) "grasping the walls to guide me and uphold me, for I was sorely weak, when, on a sudden, Death, I thought, stood beside me. My breath failed; there was a strange tightening at my throat, and I thought, 'Surely Death has come,' and then—" (and she fought for breath to tell her message through)—"I looked up and beheld Christ! It was rapture, rapture! Pastor, tell them that!"

This is the secret! To see Christ in every experience however dark is to have a cheerful, triumphant soul. Such a soul knows that whichever way the battle turns the victory is sure. To live is Christ, and to die is gain. It believes that all things work together for good to those that love God. Looking beyond life's clouds it dwells in the perpetual sunlight.

And because it lives in the light it radiates light. It is as happy as the little child, because it has given all care into its Father's hands. Its joyfulness is contagious. It knows that the way to "make blessing go around" is, first of all, to have a thankful heart for them. And the thankful heart always overflows to others.

MEN AND EVENTS IN THE WORLD'S NEWS

A GROUP of about sixty Russian teachers and professional men arrived in America a few weeks ago to study social and educational institutions in the United States. Their itinerary includes visits to a number of the largest and most important cities of the country. Shortly after their arrival in New York they were received at the old City Hall in New York by Mayor Gaynor. William A. Marbel, president of the Merchants' Association, and J. H. Snodgrass, American consul general at Moscow, presented the visitors. In his little address of welcome the mayor spoke of the progress of government in Russia and complimented the visitors upon some of the recent legislation of their native land. He said he hoped the delegation would notice American mistakes in education and not hesitate to call attention to them. He added: "I am told that you intend to look particularly into the methods of technical education in this country. That is the very point at which our system of education has been deficient.

THE RUSSIAN DELEGATION WITH MAYOR GAYNOR ON THE STEPS OF NEW YORK'S CITY HALL

We are now waking up to the fact in this country that of all things we want to give our children a technical education. We want to educate them to know how to do something useful to make a living and be good and useful citizens."

While the visitors were in New York they not only visited many educational and sociological institutions but inspected the harbor and dock facilities of the city and were entertained by the Merchants' Association at a shore dinner given at Glen Island.

A STUBBORNLY contested strike that had already raged twenty weeks, the close of a spectacular strike which had led a city to confiscate and operate a number of ice plants, and a threatened railroad strike which might prevent fifty million travelers from carrying out their daily programs, were the leading features of the industrial situation for the week ending July 12. In Paterson, N. J., about 18,000 strikers refused to return to work even after more than eighty silk mills had conceded the demands relating to hours of employment, while refusing the increase in wages. The striking operators have suffered greatly during the twenty weeks' struggle, but seem determined to hold out till their demands are more completely met by the mill owners. The conductors and trainmen on forty-two Eastern railroads, by a more than 94 per cent. vote of the members of their organizations, determined to strike for higher wages, pointing out that the rates paid on these roads were lower than those prevailing West and South. Congress became actively interested in the dispute, and endeavored so to amend the Erdmann act as to make it successfully applicable to the situation. In Cincinnati the striking employees of the various ice plants voted, on July 6, to return to work. Great interest was manifested throughout the country in the action of the city government which took over the ice plants affected by the strike and operated them for the benefit of the public while the conflict lasted.

Spectacular Events in the World of Labor

THAT Bulgaria, Servia and Greece are again plunged in most awful bloody war is about the only definite news that can be gathered from the welter of contradictory despatches which up to date of going to press have reached us from the Balkans. The first few days of the fighting seem to have favored Bulgaria, and victories for her over both the Servians and Greeks were reported. On July 3 and 4 a fierce battle was fought by the Greeks and Bulgarians at Kilkish, and the Greeks scored a decisive victory. A despatch dated from Vienna on July 7 reported a Bulgarian victory over a Servian division of 15,000 men. This is emphatically denied from Belgrade, and offset by the announcement that the Servians have practically annihilated nine battalions of Bulgarians who had invaded Servia. A July 8 despatch states that a French missionary confirms the rumored Bulgarian massacres. It reads in part:

Fighting Over the Spoils in the Balkans

"In one instance, it is asserted, the Bulgars burned to death 700 men belonging to Kurkut by imprisoning them in a mosque, under which they exploded bombs, setting the building on fire. They had previously assembled the victims' wives and daughters around the mosque to witness the spectacle. Even more terrible scenes were, it is stated, enacted at Kilkish, Planitza, and Raynovo, women also being burned to death."

There came from Sofia on July 8 reports of Bulgarian successes against both the Servians and the Greeks. On July 9, Athens and Constantinople both wired news of Greek successes which, on the following day, was confirmed via London. Of the Greek advance the London despatch says:

"There seems to be little doubt that General Ivanoff's army is steadily retreating before the victorious Greeks, and it is reported that the Bulgarians have evacuated both Kavala, where the Greek fleet is operating, and Dedeagatch. A Greek official statement from Athens asserts that instead of 30,000, as alleged by Bulgaria, General Ivanoff's army consisted of nearer 120,0

"Whether there is any truth in the Vienna reports to the effect that B has applied to the Powers to arrange peace is not known, but it would not unlikely, since clearly things are not going well with the Bulgaria the outbreak of cholera at many points in the field of operations, combin the exhaustion of the armies by the fierceness of the struggle, is calcul render some such solution welcome to the combatants."

It wa that the failure of the First-Second Bank was not unexpected on Wall The bank was formed last March by a merger of th and Second National Banks of Pittsburg, and the s of the institution was regarded in some quarters fr first as problematical. No New York banks or firm seriously affected by these failures, and the fear whi first felt that they were but the forerunners of a widespread disaster was soon allayed. Secretary of the Treasury M issued a statement assuring the public that the banking situation throu the country was sound and good and that the First-Second failure sporadic case due to unsound banking methods.

OLD MARINERS' CHURCH at 46 Catharine Street, New York City on Thursday evening, June 5, the scene of a remarkable service in bration of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Rev. Samuel Bo pastor of the New York Port Society's Mariners' Church. Mr. Bo a native of Liverpool, England. He sailed as an apprentice and office of that port, and later from New York. He was converted in 1875 at ners' Church, later entered the ministry and became p of Mariners' Church in June, 1888. In these twent years Mr. Boult has been instrumental in promoting vices in many different tongues. Departments for nese, Lettish, Scandinavian and Spanish have at diff times been maintained. Of these the Scandinavian Spanish, with the services in English, are now in operation. Some zation of the nature and extent of the work of Mariners' Church u Mr. Boult might be secured from a look into the pastor's correspond file. It is a storehouse of very "human documents." Letters from an mothers, inquiring for boys who have run away to sea; letters regardin securing of legal rights for the sailor; letters from sailors in prison a hospitals; letters from men shipwrecked, all suggestive of works sympat and splendidly practical, are in those files. The venerable New York Society, founded in 1818, has indeed a glorious record, and now, under able leadership of its president, Mr. James Yereance, is planning still gre work to meet the changed conditions caused by the gradual drifting of seafaring population from the East to the North River.

Anniversary at the Old Mariners' Church

A flourishing West Side Branch is in operation at No. 166 Eleventh Av between Twenty-second and Twenty-third Streets, a most advantageous tion near the Chelsea Piers and opposite the West Twenty-third Street ries. A large number of sailors from the West Side came in a body to their shipmates of the East Side, and other friends of the society, at the a versary celebration in Mariners' Church, which was gaily decorated palms and flowers and flags of all nations. The celebration was arranged a committee composed of James Yereance, president of the society; David Fleming, forty-one years a member of Mariners' Church; Augustus F. Li thirty-eight years a director of the society; and Mrs. Charles R. Scarboro thirty years a member of Mariners' Church. The audience was large enthusiastic. The exercises over which Mr. Yereance presided were de enjoyed. The service opened with a touching prayer of invocation by Rev. William T. Boult, a son of the pastor, and who is himself pastor of a Congrgegational Church at Bound Brook, N. J. Greetings were extended by the president of the Port Society, and there were addresses by brother clergymen from famous pulpits. Dr. Stoddard, a member of the session of New York Presbytery that ordained Mr. Boult, was one of the most interesting of the speakers. Splendid musical numbers were added to the program by Miss Dalziel and Mr. Oscar Lundberg, a well-known baritone. The program was closed by a stirring address from the pastor himself. Just as he had finished, a table draped with the Stars and Stripes was brought to the platform. It was a table of mystery until President Yereance arose and read a gracious testimonial commending the faithful, efficient and fruitful work of the pastor, and with the words, "Your friends have united to present this token of good-will and sincere esteem," removed the flag, bringing to view a shining silver service of unusual beauty. Obviously surprised and deeply moved, Mr. Boult ga expression to his gratitude. The audience then took up the strain of "Pull f the Shore" in genuine sailor fashion, and the benediction by Rev. Mr. Dee of the Seaman's Church Institute closed the formal exercises of the evenin Refreshments were then served in the reading room, and sailors and "land people" pressed about Rev. and Mrs. Boult to express a thousand good wish for their continuing health and success in the service of the Master and th New York Port Society.

A FOREST UNDER GLASS

THE disastrous floods which recently swept rough Ohio, the country received a striking ject lesson as to the value of forests. It has g been generally recognized that the pres- f forests contribute in many ways to the and attractiveness of the country. The us loss of life and property, largely due to ence of the friendly trees which should have d these devastating floods, has served to public appreciation of the value of forests. h wastefulness and neglect the great forest of the United States has been seriously shed. It is not generally recognized that the products of the country o-day represent such a part of the nation's wealth. , however, the various governments assisted by ederal Government are fically reforesting enor- tracts of land. A great in embryo is shown, for ce, in the accompanying ation, literally growing glass. The nursery, which intained by the State of York in connection with tensive work in the Adi- k Mountains, is typical of similar forestry work.

A SCENE AT THE NEW YORK STATE FOREST TREE NURSERY AT SARANAC INN

of the most remarkable ations in all history of effects of the disappear- f forests may be observed estine. In the days when a conquered the Promised Palestine was a wonder- ertile country, a land flow- ith milk and honey. The on Mountains were then y wooded, and a large ation was supported in rt. The general devasta- f the forests brought about, however, a grad- deterioration of the country. The hills of e, which had long served as pasture lands for herds of cattle and sheep, are now sterile. ordan has become an insignificant stream, and al smaller rivers are now completely dried up ghout the greater part of the year. Some alleys in which fertile earth washed down from lls has been deposited have retained their old ty. The land to-day supports only one-sixth opulation of the time of Solomon.

e forest nursery shown in the accompanying graphs comprises a laboratory of some 30,000 in the Adirondacks. Here millions of trees are raised from seeds in long, narrow beds like ordinary garden vegetables. Some interesting experiments have been carried out at this station in importing trees when very small, and after careful cultivation setting them out among the mountains. The trees grown in the government forestry station in Germany are considered the finest in the world. They are brought over when still very small sprouts, millions of them at a time, tied up in great bales. A few years later thousands of acres of rolling mountains will be clothed by these trees.

The seeds from which these forests are propagated are gathered with great care from only the youngest and strongest trees. At the proper time in the early spring they are planted in glass frames in soil about eighteen inches in depth. One ounce of yellow pine seeds, for instance, is sufficient to start a forest over sixteen linear feet of earth. Within ten days after planting the first sprouts begin to appear. The diminutive trees are usually transplanted the first spring after planting and in two years are ready to set out in their permanent position. Great care is taken in spacing the trees according to the slope on which they may stand. For several years the ground about them is looked to, the dead trees are removed, and in due time a strong young forest clothes the barren hills.

Throughout the country the government is encouraging the planting of forests by private landowners, and the total area planted in the past few years is enormous. In Nebraska alone there are at present some 286,000 acres of planted forests. The public is being educated to appreciate the high commercial value of these forests.

The forests of the country constitute an enormous source of the national wealth. It is estimated that the value of the forests for a single year is $1,050,000,000. To realize what this total signifies, it is interesting to point out that it is some fifteen times the value of the annual gold and silver output. In addition to this the forests are a safeguard against floods, winds, snow-slides and moving sands, and have a direct influence upon the rainfall. The presence of great masses of trees modifies the temperature, doing away in large measure with extremes both of heat and cold. The presence of a forest, it has been observed, lowers the heat average more than seven degrees, while raising the temperature in winter some four degrees.

The forests of the country once covered some 700,000,000 acres of land and were the richest in the world. To-day, through neglect and waste, the total has been enormously reduced. A startling effect of the neglect of our forests is to be observed in the Mississippi Valley. Thirty years ago, boats drawing seven feet of water ran regularly to St. Paul. To-day, boats of one-half this draught have difficulty in making the same trip. With the disappearance of the trees floods have become common, and the once inexhaustible supply of water-power is being rapidly exhausted.

Throughout Europe the forests have been cared for with the greatest attention for centuries until to-day they constitute an immense source of the national wealth of many countries. The best developed forests in the world are those of Germany. The public and private forests of Germany are at present valued at $4,500,000,000. In Austria the state forests comprise 2,000,000 acres. The French Government also derives immense wealth from the state forests and controls at present some 1,500,000 acres.

quired to dig out this ancient city. All around uins are glorious hills. Opposite the acropolis has played so great a part in the story of is, and perhaps half a mile away, is another hill of about the same height, which was the polis of the ancient city. Here, too, the ologists are at work, and in 1912 had discov- more than three hundred tombs of Lydian and an times.

e very day that we reached there a new sar- agus had been unearthed in the hillside, a Per- sarcophagus of black terra cotta, beautifully ed and marked, and of oblong shape. It was ed, and there, seeing the light of the sun for irst time for 2,500 years, was the body of a ian girl, perhaps of the period of Cyrus the t. Her glossy black hair was still perfect, and jewels and tear-bottles and vases that were d with her were unbroken and untarnished. wert thou, O maiden of the long ago? What thy name and what was thy story? Who ned for thee as thou wast laid in thy grave? father or mother or brother or lover drop tears ny beautiful casket? There is none to answer, our imaginations are stirred as we gaze at the of this lady of the long ago.

teresting as is this ancient cemetery, the chief er of attraction is in the valley between the polis and the necropolis, where the busy work- are revealing day by day the glories of ancient lis. The two pillars of which we have already en are only samples of scores of others belong- to the same temple of Artemis, which, until the ricans fell to digging them out, were buried y feet beneath the soil. These two alone were ght with their capitals intact, and stood thirty- feet above the ground after the storms and hquakes of centuries had done their worst.

his temple was probably built in the time of ander the Great, about 350 B.C., or perhaps repaired in his time, for he was one of the conquerors of this often conquered city. Indeed, the temple seems to have been undergoing extensive repairs when it was completely destroyed in the year 17 A.D., for some of the great columns were not yet fluted, showing that they were still unfinished. More marvelous still are the ruins of a temple found in a yet lower stratum, and built not of marble, like the one I have described, but of a coarser, darker stone. This is believed to be, without question, a temple of Crœsus himself.

One of the most marvelous sights that the traveler sees from the hills of Sardis is the Bin Tepe, or the plain of "a thousand mounds," where the kings and priests and great men of Lydia were buried, not in the hillside necropolis which I have already described, but in a wide plain some two hours' ride from Sardis. Some of these mounds, or tumuli, are enormous in extent, one of them being larger than the Pyramid of Ghizeh in Egypt. There are not a thousand of these tombs, but, to be more exact, about six hundred and sixty-six of them. The largest is that of the great king Alyattes, which Herodotus minutely describes. This is circular in form and 1,200 feet in diameter. As one looks through the cleft of the mountains that hem in Sardis, it seems as if this plain were dotted with green hills, some of them of a considerable height, but each one of them is a single tomb of a great man of the mighty kingdom of Lydia.

Such are the scenes, picturesque and striking, but desolate and depressing, which strike the traveler as he visits the dead and buried city of Sardis.

What is the message sent to its church by "Him that hath the seven spirits of God and the seven stars"? It is the saddest of all the seven messages. The Revelator knows the works of the church, but has no word of praise for them, as he had for the church of Ephesus, though in many respects the messages to these two churches are much the same. Sardis had not only left its first love, as had Ephesus, but it was dead though it had a name to live. The church was an empty organization without life. It had wheels within wheels perhaps, but no living spirit within the wheels. Even the church of Pergamos, that dwelt "where Satan's seat was," was praised for holding fast the holy name, and for not denying the faith, but there was no faithful martyr Antipas in Sardis to receive such praise. Yet though the church as a church was dead, like many another church, alas, far away from Sardis, there were "a few names" even there that had not "defiled their garments." Some things "remain" even in a dead church, as to-day a faithful minority may keep alive in their own hearts the love of Christ, even when they cannot revive the church to which they belong.

Twice over to the faithful few came the word, "Be watchful!" Even as the citadel of Sardis was surprised and taken twice over, and two great dynasties overthrown for lack of watchfulness, so the faithful ones are exhorted to watch, that they may save at least their own souls and at last be worthy to walk with the Son of Man in white. To these few came a more beautiful and consoling message than to any other church of the seven. These few that have overcome shall be clothed in white garments, like the pure white toga worn by Roman citizens on days of triumph as they walked through the streets of Rome, following the victorious general who had come with trophies won in battle over a foreign foe. So the faithful ones of Sardis shall triumph, though the dead church shall be blotted out and buried. The kingdom of our Lord will win the day, though a church here and there may become utterly extinct. Though it lose even its name to live, and be buried deep as the temples of Sardis, yet if there is but one faithful soul who has not defiled his garments, he shall triumph and walk in the white procession of victory, for the kingdom of God cannot suffer defeat, whatever may be true of the individual church.

More "Military Masses"

CLEVELAND, Ohio., June 29.—One hundred thousand men and women, the largest gathering ever assembled in Cleveland at a religious service, attended the first open-air military mass in the history of Ohio Catholicism this morning in Rockefeller Park.

The mass was celebrated by Right Rev. John P. Farrelly, Bishop of Cleveland.

The big crowd, composed of Catholics and non-Catholics, stood in a huge semi-circle, banked thousands deep before the altar.

Preceding the mass was a parade of 10,000 uniformed members of the Knights of St. John and other Catholic military organizations.

At 10.20 o'clock a salute of thirteen guns of Battery A, located on the upper boulevard of Rockefeller Park, announced the arrival of the vanguard of the parade. Facing the altar and at the left of the audience were especially constructed stands for the united choir of 200 voices.

Inspired by the enthusiasm and eager anticipation of his audience, Bishop Farrelly extended his informal address scheduled to occupy ten minutes' time to half an hour. "My heart is seething with emotion as I contemplate this immense gathering," said Bishop Farrelly. "It represents in every sense of the word the true manhood and womanhood of Catholic societies in Cleveland. It is a spectacle which charms the eye."

THIS account, taken from the columns of a Catholic journal, the Western Watchman of St. Louis, Mo. (July 3, 1913), describes an event which possesses an interest for every American citizen, native or foreign-born. It deals not with religion save in the name, but with that clerico-militarism which is an essential part of the spectacular propaganda of the Roman Church for impressing the American people with its growing power and influence in this republic.

Witnessing such a scene as this, one might almost conclude that patriotism had died out in the land which Thomas Nelson Page, author, and our new ambassador to Italy, recently declared to be a country that was "made by Protestantism." Before him, a long line of distinguished American patriots reached the same conclusion. Hence, when Rome, in the name of religion, sets her spectacular mechanism in motion to fascinate the masses here by the same methods she has always employed in older lands, she becomes a fair subject for criticism. She has the same right of religious freedom in all respects that other churches enjoy, and no one is disposed to deny her that right. If Rome can "make America Catholic" by her spiritual activities, it is her privilege; but the mingling of her own uniformed legionaries with American soldiers and American guns, and all the pomp and display incident to such an assemblage, make up a picture of Rome militant which, however it might be regarded in Spain, or Austria, or the Catholic states of South America, is an anachronism here.

It is only a few weeks since a so-called "military mass" was celebrated in Texas City, Texas, at which, according to the reports in the Boston Pilot (May 10), six thousand American soldiers and civilians attended. Now Cleveland, the sixth city of the Union in importance, permits a "military mass" to be held in a public park, with gates closed to traffic, while a salute of thirteen guns is fired by a battery of the Ohio National Guard in honor of the event. Shades of Washington, Jefferson, Franklin and Lincoln! These are times of change, indeed, when such things can happen and never a word of protest or warning arise from a single village newspaper.

What would be thought of any other religious body—Methodist, Presbyterian, Lutheran, Congregational or Baptist—attempting a demonstration like this? Could it be done with any justification in the name of religion?

A few weeks ago a Protestant officer in Spain dared to assert his rights by refusing to kneel at a "military mass" in that country. He was punished for his courageous independence. You can read the story in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD of June 25 last. Not one American soldier or civilian is reported as having raised a voice of protest at Cleveland. Is it any wonder that the Roman bishop's heart "seethed with emotion," or that he found the spectacle charming to the eye? America has begun where Spain left off when it permits to pass unquestioned a gigantic military display with uniforms and swords, under the cloak of religion. Every "military mass" under the auspices of the Roman Church or of any church, is an open concession to the advocates of the union of church and state. It is an encroachment far beyond the boundaries within which every church and every religion has its true sphere of action.

After Convention—What?

CONVENTION season is at its height. And this has been a great summer for conventions. They are spectacular things, interesting to observe, and full of suggestion. They are worth while. But it may not be out of place to repeat the hint that when autumn comes and all these convention-goers are back at their daily and weekly tasks, there rests on them a grave responsibility to make the expense and the effort and the excitement of convention-time count for big and adequate results.

Just one word will make sure that the instruction and inspiration of the convention will last throughout the year—the word is Christ. If any convention is a success it is because he is there; if any delegate puts in a year of valuable work it will be because he has taken Christ with him back to his task. Let us remember that power for work does not rest in numbers. One shall chase a thousand and two put ten thousand to flight. One consecrated soul who sees Christ all the year round may accomplish more for the kingdom than a thousand delegates who assemble in enthusiastic convention.

After the wind, the earthquake; after the earthquake, the fire; after the fire, the still, small

The Mad Balkan Quarrel

EVERY advantage won by the Balkan Pow the war with Turkey has been sacrificed fratricidal war which has broken out amon former allies. Bulgar, Serb and Greek are n erally rending each other in the bitter quarre the spoils. Conflicting despatches make it di to learn just how the new war is going, but it tacle to witness these professedly Christian na fall of the infidel power, now tearing each ot throats. United and harmonious, the three Ba States would have ranked as a new power in E pean affairs. Their finances exhausted, their e bodied male population depleted and their p impoverished, unless peace comes soon, there be little left worth saving from the wreck.

The Horse that Wouldn't Pull

THAT team," said the farmer, "is a fine-loo

Our farmer friend's homely philosophy car a wholesome lesson. In every avenue of hun activity we find these two classes: the inefficient the thorough, the make-believe and the real. E which Christ reigns supreme. The preacher w applause and admiration of the world.

World-Wide Beneficence

THERE is an old saying that we are rich or through what we give and poor only throu what we refuse, and judged by this rule THE CHR
TIAN HERALD has the richest constituency in t world. They are in the very forefront of Christ service and their hands of help, together with th prayers, literally circle the globe. To us, who ha been their associate during all these years of helpf effort, it has been a very gracious privilege to the channel of such a stream of blessing.

In the present issue we print the acknowled ments of contributions to the various good cause which our readers have given generous aid. Th include the Bowery Mission, the "Bread-Line," t Ohio Flood Fund, the Balkan Relief Fund, and number of miscellaneous charities. Regarded as whole, it is a wonderful record of practical Chri tianity. In Bunyan's story, the shepherds led t pilgrims to Mount Charity, and showed them a m who was cutting garments from a roll of cloth th was never diminished. "This," they explained, " to show that he who has a heart to give of his labo

THE BIBLE AND NEWSPAPER

CONDUCTED BY
FERDINAND C. IGLEHART D. D.

Illinois Adopts Woman Suffrage

THE governor of Illinois affixed his signature to the bill the other day, and woman suffrage on all but constitutional questions became a law in that State. Aside from moral considerations, the good policy of the ceful methods of promoting female suffrage in country as compared with the militancy used by women in the contest in Great Britain is mani-. In 1909 there were four States that had nted woman suffrage. In 1910 another was ed; in 1911 still another; in 1912 three more e added, and this year the State of Illinois ed the ranks, making ten female suffrage tes, containing a population of 13,370,232, as inst that of 1,644,034 in 1909. In four short rs, by the most dignified and peaceful process, cause has added six States to its column, and opulation of 11,726,198. The damage to the se in Great Britain by the injection of force and tality into the contest can be readily seen by a w of the facts. In 1909 a bill to enfranchise the nen of Great Britain passed the House of Com-ns by a majority of thirteen. Last year a simi- bill was defeated by a majority of 14, and this r the majority against it was advanced to 47. 1909 there was a favorable majority in the use of Commons of 13, in 1910 of 110, in 1911 of ', in 1912 there was an ad-se majority of 14, and this r the majority against the asure was advanced to 47. st year the suffrage mili-ncy, taken first as a joke, be-ne a serious matter, and a k at the turn of the votes ows how far the House of mmons came from being sed or threshed into friend-ess to the measure. The icule, the rudeness, the bru-ity, the hysteria bordering on anity, reaching the climax h the torch in one hand and bomb in the other, are a par-y and mockery on the claims a cultivated and virtuous manhood. The Phœnix Park rders postponed home rule Ireland twenty years. It is ely that the militant female ders have postponed the tri-ph of equal suffrage in Great itain twenty years. Their ters on this side, like those in inois, are acting wisely and comingly, and are correspond-gly successful. The conse-ences of a violent militancy e suggested by the words of e Psalmist:

His mischief shall return upon his own head, and his violent ling shall come down upon his own pate. (Ps. 7: 16.)

Relic of Wasted Life

MR. WILLIAM W. SMITH of Quaker City, Ohio, displayed to his neighbors a dollar bill hich was quite a curiosity. It was not because was new, never used before, nor because it was old as to be sought as a souvenir. It was be-use it had marked on the back of it in ink, "The st dollar of an ill-spent fortune." The inscription d not indicate whether the writer was young or d, whether it was the last dollar of an inherited rtune which had been an encouragement to a life idleness and dissipation, or whether it was the st of a fortune made by industry and ability and en thrown away by a life of evil habit or foolish dulgence. The writing indicated that this last llar bill was spent in sinful ways. The Bible has ven a life-size portrait of the man who wrote the nes on the dollar bill in this description of the odigal son:

And there wasted his substance with riotous living. (Luke : 13.)

Wisely Admonishes Young Men

PRESIDENT HIBBEN of Princeton University gave advice to the members of the graduating ass that could be read with profit by every young an of ability and ambition in the country, espe-ally this last paragraph: "The world commands ou to take your place and to fight your fight in the name of honor and of chivalry against the powers of organized evil and commercialized vice, against the poverty, disease and death which follow fast in the wake of sin and ignorance, against all the innumerable forces which are working to destroy the image of God in man. Heed the call of your kind. It is the human cry of spirits in bondage, of souls in despair, of lives debased and doomed. It is the call of man to his brother. This is your vocation; follow it in the name of God and man. The time is short; the opportunity is great." The president urged his graduates to ask in seriousness and answer with service the question originally asked in insolence:

Am I my brother's keeper? (Gen. 4: 9.)

Toy Parrot Betrays Burglar

LOUIS LENHARDT, a salesman of Brooklyn, was awakened the other morning by a voice saying, "Polly wants a cracker." The man recognized it as the voice of a stuffed parrot belonging to his young son. When the parrot's head is pushed forward the mechanism inside the bird forms the words. Thinking that the boy was playing with his toy, the father got up and went to the child's bedroom to tell him to go to sleep. There to his surprise he found it was a burglar, who was packing up all the valuables he could lay his hands on. In moving about the room the burglar had accidentally touched the toy and set it to talking. Lenhardt grappled with the intruder, who threw him to one side and darted out of the house and up the street, followed by Lenhardt crying for the police, who arrested the thief and took him to prison. We have in the incident an illustration of the truth of Scripture:

Be sure your sin will find you out. (Num. 32: 23.)

GOVERNOR DUNNE OF ILLINOIS SIGNING THE WOMAN FRANCHISE BILL

Helped Youth Through College

CHARLES FROELICH, a farmer's lad, living near Welleston, Ohio, was ambitious to complete a liberal education, but did not have means sufficient to do so. He went to a physician in that city, Dr. E. S. Higley, and borrowed from him $700 and graduated from college as a mining engineer. This was in 1880. Soon after the young man went to Australia. Not a word was heard from him for twenty-five years, when one morning he came into Dr. Higley's office and said he owed the doctor some money. He had changed in his appearance so that the doctor did not recognize him, and then he revealed his identity and paid the $700 principal and compound interest on the same to date. He informed his benefactor that he had been successful in Australia and South Africa and had amassed a fortune. Mr. Froelich returned to Australia and nothing was heard from him again until the other day, when Henry K. Thorncroft, a lawyer of Melbourne, Australia, arrived in Welleston and notified Dr. Higley that Mr. Froelich had died without relatives and had left his entire estate, valued at a million dollars, to his benefactor. The lawyer said that his client had told him that it was that $700 that enabled him to finish his education, to which he attributed his earthly success, and that he felt satisfied in leaving his fortune to his benefactor, as there were no blood relatives depending upon him. The doctor who inherited the fortune, who was as greatly pleased as he was surprised, is himself seventy years old. The lending of money to this young student was, in a certain sense, a business transaction, but the sentimental ingredient was strong. He was glad to help a young man get up in life and prepare himself for its promotions and duties. The unusual reward to this investment suggests the increase of spiritual treasure which comes after years of waiting to those who sow the right kind of seed, as expressed in the following words of the Psalmist:

He that goeth forth and weepeth, bearing precious seed, shall doubtless come again with rejoicing, bringing his sheaves with him. (Ps. 126: 6.)

Baby Dies of Fright

AT ONE of the Atlantic Ocean fashionable summer resorts, a mother took her baby boy, two years old, to the beach for his first ocean bath. The little fellow was greatly frightened, and when a big wave came toward them she said in fun that she was going to put him under it. The threat threw him into a spasm, and the mother, thinking that a plunge in the water would restore him, put him under the wave, and the shock had the opposite effect: it stopped his heart, and her darling baby lay dead in her arms. The mother meant everything for the best, and would have freely given up her life for her child, and yet she made a mistake in frightening him in fun with the plunge. He thought she was going to drown him. The practice of frightening children with ghost stories is as cruel in spirit as it is immoral in principle. Let there be no deceits for children, no suggestions of cruelty, even in fun. The fun is just as much pain to them as though it were in earnest. Innocent children are the last persons on earth to be trifled with by insincerity, and yet the deceit of children by parents and nurses, the idle threats of danger from human and superhuman sources, are as old as the race, and the false dealing which is called fun comes under this description:

For their deceit is falsehood. (Ps. 119: 118.)

Long-Range Electrical Power

ELECTRICITY generated by water power at the dam across the Mississippi River at Keokuk, Iowa, was turned on to the wires of St. Louis the other day, and during the busy hours two-thirds of the street cars in the city were propelled by the new current. Most of the industrial motors in the city were also driven by its power. By this time practically all the street cars, motors and electric lights in St. Louis are operated by the water plant, over 125 miles away. St. Louis is one of the largest cities in the country to be thus supplied with power. Generating the electric current by water power is a long step in advance in decreasing its price as a commercial product and in making universal its use. Whenever electricity can be made cheaper than other motors, steam is likely to be relegated to the past with the ox and horse and the cart or carriage they drew and the industrial machines they propelled. God is the only Being in the universe who does not have to borrow power from without. Everybody, mind and soul, is so constituted that the motor forces come from without, from earth, and air, and sky. The wires of the soul quiver with the electric current of love divine, which turns the wheels, directs the activities, and produces the results for this and the next world.

But ye shall receive power, after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you. (Acts 1: 8.)

LOOKING OUT OVER THE FIELDS AT MONT-LAWN

THE GLORIOUS FOURTH AT MONT-LAWN

PERFECT weather, hundreds of visitors from far and near and an attractive yet simple program of patriotic exercises made July Fourth a day of unalloyed enjoyment at THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Children's Home. Never had the place looked lovelier. Flags and bunting and evergreens were everywhere, and every cottage and dormitory looked like a patriotic bower.

It was a great day for the three hundred child-guests of the Home. Rising bright and early, they were dotting the playgrounds in merry groups when the visitors began to arrive. As usual, the newcomers, after a hearty greeting, went about in little parties inspecting the Home buildings—the new bathing pavilion with its shower baths and sterilizer, and the recently installed pumping station which supplies the Home throughout with an abundance of pure spring water, coming in for a good share of attention.

At noon, the children marched, in military fashion, to dinner in the great dining-hall of Fort Plenty. At one o'clock the guests were entertained at luncheon in the Fort. Shortly after two, the children assembled in the Temple for an hour of patriotic song, under the leadership of Professor Noll, who on this occasion was ably assisted by Professor Benjamin F. Butts, the well-known evangelistic singer and musical director of the Evangelistic Committee of New York City. The visitors, who filled the ambulatory and the gallery, and many of whom were seated on the platform, were delighted with the singing. Then everybody marched to the lawn in front of the Homestead building, on the south end of which a speaker's stand had been erected. The children sat down in a great semi-circle on the grass, the guests occupying the outer fringe, sitting on chairs and benches.

State Senator Reuben L. Gledhill gave the opening address—a patriotic one, suited to the character of the day, and which was repeatedly cheered. He was followed by Mr. Edward R. Johnstone, who gave a personal reminiscence of Lincoln at Gettysburg on the occasion of the delivery of the immortal speech by the great President. The audience listened intently while he described the physical appearance of Lincoln, his manner of speaking, his homeliness and simplicity, and the contrast his oratory presented to the other speakers on that memorable occasion. Mr. Johnstone's address, which was loudly cheered, furnished the real key-note to the celebration.

Rev. Ferdinand C. Iglehart spoke next, and delighted his audience by his eloquent and effective comparison of Washington and Lincoln, the two greatest names in American history, his address showing that he had made a remarkable study the two leaders, socially and temperamentally the one an aristocrat born and nurtured amid af ence, the other a son of poverty, and a type of great majority of those who have achieved natio distinction. As Dr. Iglehart sat down amid che ing, the Rev. Dr. G. H. Furbay was introduced, a gave an entertaining talk of his boyhood days Ohio—the native State of so many famous Ame cans. His anecdotes were punctuated with hom yet sound advice to the little folks, who showed th appreciation by frequent applause. Professor Bu then invited the entire audience to rise and si two verses of "America," which brought the orato of the day to a close.

There was a large gathering of guests, amo whom were Mrs. Louis Klopsch, Miss Ma Klopsch, Mrs. Stephen Merritt and several me bers of her family, Rev. W. F. Schoenfeld, Rev. M Hamann, Mrs. and Miss Furbay, Mr. Otto Koeni Mr. and Mrs. Theodore Waters, Mr. H. Emery, G. H. Sandison, editor of THE CHRISTIA HERALD, etc.

THE DISTURBING "BAMBINA"

BY ISABEL REYNOLDS KRAUTH

A Story Complete in This Issue

"JUST-you-a-wait," threatened Signora Rossini angrily, "wait-a-till I tell you's sis, bag-girl!" She had just terminated an exciting pursuit, as the person pursued, and now eloquently addressed, had scrambled to safety beneath the kitchen table, from which shelter Signora Rossini was far too exhausted to evict her.

"Maybe you tink you no catch-a-lick?" she continued, swaying her portly figure against the boiler for support, "but wait till Giuseppina com-a-home, my new a pitcha all-a-broke all-a-smash!"

Stella Marie, the five-year-old disturber of the peace, listened to the thundering voice of her landlady and guardian with no more concern than that with which she heard the rain beating persistently on the tin roof of the shed. Once beneath the table she was at peace. The enemy was far too fat and short-winded to attempt attack, since it would necessitate stooping, as Stella Marie curled herself up like a tired kitten and gravely winked one eye at the Signora's stalwart ankles, but even as she composed herself for sleep a second pair of ankles loomed upon her "worm's view," and then she knew her troubles were indeed at an end, for this was a neighbor come in for the latest bit of gossip, the arrest of a wife-beating "Polak" in the neighborhood, and as Signora Rossini had been an eye-witness to the excitement, nothing put her in a better humor than some one to whom she could recount the affair.

The visitor listened eagerly to every phase of the tale, and then stooping to lift her key that she had dropped, exclaimed:

"Why, there is the Cerina little one sound asleep beneath the table. How goes it with her and the poor girl, her sister, Mamma mia? The child grows more beautiful every day!"

Signora Rossini, thoroughly restored to her good nature, smiled broadly.

"There will be changes in that quarter," she said in her jabbering Neapolitan dialect. "Giuseppina has had bad luck. This winter they have put off many workers at the mill, and they only gave her half time for many weeks. Then she became so ill from work and worry she fainted three times at her loom. She is very brave, that girl, and she promised the dying mother to care for Stella, but it will be different now. You know Pontello—Pasquale Pontello—"

Her hearer nodded. There were few in the Italian quarter that had not heard of Pasquale Pontello. He was the hope and the pride of all who had any interest in him. Young, handsome, energetic, he had taken on the customs and speech of the New World with a rapidity nothing short of marvelous. He worked by day and went to night school in the evenings. He had bought for his widowed mother (whom he adored) a home quite out of the narrow streets of this "Little Italy." He led an Italian band, ran two bank accounts, and was in every way a most exemplary youth.

"Well," continued Signora Rossini, her voice rising shrilly as she warmed to her subject, "Pasquale, who could have any girl he set eyes on, ha taken a fancy to Giuseppina. That pale, thin little snip of a girl! He praises her eyes, he fol lows her like a dog! But Pasquale is no fool. H may marry Giuseppina, but he will not take Stella too. It will be the Home for the bambina. They are all alike, these lovesick girls. Pasquale's mother is old, and, I am told, dislikes children. H would do nothing to displease her. Giuseppina will forget deathbed promises of always keeping Stella. A handsome lad comes quickly between her and the dead!"

The sharp, thoughtless words had not wakened the little sleeper whom they so greatly concerned, but they fell with all their coarse brutality on the ears of the bedraggled girl who had silently entered the dark passageway leading from the front door. She started forward, but the women, hearing the step, lowered their voices, and changed to another subject when the shivering little eaves-dropper opened the door and stood before them.

Her dark, passionate eyes glared at them in so uncanny a way that Signora Rossini and her friend could only hold their breath and wait.

"So," cried the girl wildly in Italian, "you say I forget my mother! You say—" But baby ears, deaf to gossiping voices, were sharp enough when a step they knew drew near, and Stella Marie, emerging suddenly from beneath the table, ran to her sister, squealing an incoherent babble of greeting, throwing her short arms around her sister's wet skirts.

Giuseppina sat down on the nearest chair and

SANS NOM

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER, JR.

EVERAL times I have given you glimpses into letters, sunny little visits into the hearts and souls of my chums, with attractive d-pictures of the mountains and s and cities that they have loved. l now I am going to v you something along same line; and yet ething very different. I am going to print stions that girls have to me, girls that have t their names secret. If ad known their names addresses they would e been answered much e promptly, but—well, n sure that they will be tented with the replies hey receive them. This t letter comes from a y anxious young lady. says: "I am twenty-seven years and a young man who is only nty-one professes to love me very rly. I love him more than all the ld, but my conscience will not say it is right for me to marry him. you think it would be right? I him so much that I could not bear lo anything to mar his life."

Margaret E. Sangster, Jr.

f these two young people really love n other, six years will make very e difference. For love, real love, uld surmount any small or large acles.

his little letter comes to me signed scouraged":

I have graduated from a business ege and have the training to be a nographer, but although I have an- red advertisements, and have put lications in employment agencies typewriter offices, I have no suc- s."

f you are a good stenographer you uld really have very little trouble. n sure that if you go to the office of typewriter that you use, they will your name on file and get you a ition sooner or later. But what- r happens do not show the white ther—keep a firm grip on your rage.

Now I am going to be cross. I may n scold a little. For a young girl tes to tell me that her mother is ious about her friends, and always s her whom she is going out with night, what time she will be home, other things along the same line. e girl obviously expects me to tell that she has a right to be very ch annoyed, but I am inclined to ee with the mother. A girl should e a mother into her confidence just she would a chum. For a mother -a mother, and it is her right to w everything. If she cares to ask stions and give opinions about the s that call on her daughter, she is fectly right. It is not only her vilege but her duty.

This letter is from a girl who ms to be very lonely and rather ng. I wish that I could write to personally. She says:

I never wrote to you before, but I very lonely and need a friend. I e to read what you write and I feel t I love you. My name is like rs, Margaret."

wish that my namesake friend uld write to me so that I could nk her personally for her sweet le note.

This letter is from a little invalid l who lives in the West. She sends lan that she wants to have me tell the readers of THE CHRISTIAN RALD, for, as she says: "It might ghten the lives of other shut-ins."

I am only a little over fifteen now, ugh I feel worlds older. I guess I 'old before my time.' I suppose kness has that effect upon one. But give you the story of my Surprise x. I have four younger sisters, a ther and father living, and a great ny relatives and friends.

'An aunt who lives with us discov- d the idea. All unknown to me, of course. She took a large cardboard box, and all contributed little gifts to it. Everything was wrapped in paper and tied up and when they got it all ready they brought the box to me. Every morning before the children went to school (for they enjoyed it fully as much as I) they brought the box to me and I was allowed to take one package. Then, of course, followed the fun of opening that, and the box was put away for another day. Various friends were interested in the idea, and nearly every day I saw a new package in the box. Once a cheery letter, at another time a box of candy, which, of course, was shared with the family—again, a writing cabinet with a dollar bill in one of the pockets. Until I had such a collection of things I had to have a box to put them in. The box lasted for two months or six weeks."

Little girl, I wish I could send you a letter for your box, but then—I don't even know your name.

Last of all I am going to show you the tiniest part of a charming little talk (on paper) that one of "the unknowns" sent to me only a few days ago. She begins:

"I do want some one to talk to so badly." She tells me about her home, her friends, and her books, and then she finishes with this naïve little postscript:

"P. S.—When I began this letter I had no intention of sending it at all, but since you don't know who I am, I am going to send it, because I like you."

I like my nameless and complimentary friend just about as well as she likes me. I hope that some time I shall know her better.

Now, girls, here we are at the end of the program for this week. I have only published the letters that had to be answered in cold black type; but oh, how I wish that I could have let you see some of the other ones, too. For my girls have been having thrilling times lately. They have been graduating, and going on picnics, and working hard, and taking exciting vacations. And though they did not guess it for a minute, I have been with them, every one of them, wishing that I might share their sorrows and hoping that they would divide their joys with me. For the happiness of summer has crept into my soul as I read their letters.

Summer glows upon the meadows,
Summer gleams upon the sea,
Bird notes thrill among the branches,
Bringing messages to me—
Messages that speak of friendships,
From the East and from the West,
And my heart is filled with sunshine,
Summer at its very best!

Called Higher

Mrs. Emily Toy, of New York City, was called higher March 12, 1913. She was a member of the First Baptist Church of tbat city for twenty-eight years.

Mrs. Mary Elizabeth Haslacker, of New York, N. Y., passed away in Maysville, W. Va., May 4, 1913. She was a member of Calvary Baptist Church, New York City.

Mrs. Martha P. McGirrity, of Marion Center, Pa., passed to a higher life, May 15, 1913, at the age of 71 years. She was a faithful member of the Presbyterian Church from girlhood.

Mrs. M. L. Mahaffey, of Mahaffey, Pa., answered the summons of her Master, May 21, 1913. She was 86 years old, and most of her life was spent in working for her Master. Her life was a benediction to the community in which she lived.

A singular coincidence occurred when three brothers were called higher within a month. They were Mr. R. A. Bendall, Danville, Va., April 27, 1913, aged 61.; Mr. E. F. Bendall, Danville, Va., May 9, 1913, aged 63; and Mr. R. T. Bendall, of Warrentown, Va., May 23, 1913, aged 80 years.

IDOLATRY VERSUS THE TRUE GOD*

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON BY DR. AND MRS. WILBUR F. CRAFTS

IF WE were taught in our childhood that God brought the ten plagues upon Egypt for the purpose of punishing the hard-hearted and wicked Pharaoh, do not let us make the mistake of so teaching the children of the present day. God had a benign purpose toward Pharaoh. It was to lead him out of his base idolatry into the realization of the true God.

RA HAPI PTAH SEB APIS

These are some of the gods Pharaoh worshiped. When it is explained what each of these gods stood for, we will clearly see how each plague was a blow at idolatry which should cause Pharaoh and all Egyptians to turn to the worship of the true God. Hapi was the river god, the River Nile, and represented fruitfulness, for that river alone by its annual rise saved Egypt from being a desert. How was Hapi fallen when at the command of God the waters were turned into blood, not human blood, nor the blood of animals, but of the color of blood, and so changed that they produced death instead of life, and the fish, the emblems of the god Hapi, were destroyed. For seven days that horror lasted, and the river became a mass of corruption. But the heart of Pharaoh was still hard. He may have reasoned this way: "It is caused by the algæ and will soon pass away." But all the same one of the chief gods had become a menace. The second plague was a thrust at the god Ptah—the frogs that came up out of the river, and infested the land, even making their way into the homes of the people, contaminating their bodies, their beds and their food. Until that time they had been looked upon as sacred emblems of the god Ptah, and were sometimes called gods and goddesses! Also the frog was connected with the worship of Hapi. But they were too many for Pharaoh, and he sent word to Moses and Aaron, saying, "Entreat the Lord that he may take away the frogs, and I will let the people go." This was the first acknowledgment by Pharaoh of the true God, and sounded very like a prayer. But this attitude did not last long, for Pharaoh reasoned within himself, or Satan did it for him, "We have had frogs before, but they soon went away."

The third plague when the dust of the ground was turned into lice was to disgust Pharaoh with his god Seb, who represented the fruitfulness of the earth. The priests of Seb could not officiate with lice upon their robes, so for the time being the worship of Seb had to cease.

The fourth plague was directed against Seb when all sorts of "flies"—winged pests of all kinds—were sent by the Lord God into all parts of Egypt. This was specially a strike at the "scarab," the sacred beetle which was sculptured on every monument and painted on every mummy chest, engraved on gems, and worn as amulets by all Egyptians. Their treasure became their pest! Again Pharaoh was brought to the point of yielding to God. He sent for Moses, and said: "I will let you go, that ye may sacrifice to the Lord your God." And God took away the "flies." But Pharaoh reasoned within himself, "This is not the first time the wind has brought these creatures; now they are all gone, and they will not come back again." And before the Israelites could get ready to go Pharaoh had changed his mind, and would not let the people go.

The testing time went on. The plagues had commenced in June. It was now December, and the fifth plague was sent against the god Apis, which represented the worship of animals, because the Egyptians believed that after death the soul took up its abode in some kind of an animal, more or less honorable according to the merits of the person. And so when God sent a disease upon all the cattle of the Egyptians, those of the Israelites being exempt, it was striking at the root of the matter. The sacred cows and the images of cows which they worshiped certainly lost much of their value that day! The citadel of idolatry was falling! But Pharaoh was not yet convinced concerning the true God.

Then God sent the sixth plague—that of boils. To bring this about God directed Moses and Aaron to fill their hands with ashes from the furnace, and go in before Pharaoh, scattering the ashes before him. The Egyptians had a god called Set, the god of evil, and before him they scattered the ashes of human sacrifices. This was all understood by Pharaoh, but he hardly expected the great sickness which should come upon him and his people. A boil now and then is bad enough to bear, but for everybody to be afflicted with boils at the same time is quite impossible to describe. Even those men called "magicians," who had tried at every point to counterfeit the works of Moses and Aaron, had to succumb to the boils, and they were not able to appear at the court of Pharaoh, or make further claims for themselves.

The seventh plague was directed against Seb, the earth-god. It consisted of a storm of rain and hail and of lightning which broke the trees and destroyed the crops of grain. This made a deep impression upon Pharaoh, and he sent for Moses and Aaron to come to him. When they came, he said: "The Lord is righteous, and I and my people are wicked. I will let you go, and ye shall stay no longer." These words sounded almost as if Pharaoh was at least beginning to think there was some quality in the God of the Israelites that he did not find in Hapi, Ptah, Seb, Ra and Isis. But Pharaoh was not ready yet to obey the true God. It was now March. And God sent another plague. He told Moses and Aaron to go in before Pharaoh and say to him: "If thou refuse to let my people go to-morrow, I will bring locusts into thy court." Pharaoh was angry and Moses and Aaron were roughly driven out. The next day God sent locusts. There were so many that every green thing and all grain and fruit that had not been destroyed by the storm of rain and hail was eaten up by the locusts. It would seem as if the people must now starve. Where now was Seb?

"I have sinned against the Lord your God, and against you," groaned Pharaoh as Moses and Aaron again came in before him. If Pharaoh had only said: "I have sinned against the true God, whom I now take for my God," there would have been no more trouble in Egypt. God sent a strong wind to drive away the locusts, and then Pharaoh said, "I will not let the people go!" It took him a long time to learn that God was stronger and greater than his idol gods, for it was now April, almost a year since God had begun to deal with him.

The greatest of all the gods which Pharaoh worshiped was Ra. He was the sun god. He was supposed to give light and heat and life to plants, animals and people. Without him all things would die. So God determined to show Pharaoh and the Egyptians that he was greater than Ra. He stopped the shining of the sun and moon and stars for three days, and there was black darkness in Egypt—darker than the darkest night. Only the Israelites had light! Again Pharaoh sent for Moses, and he said: "I am willing the people shall go, but they must leave their sheep and their cattle in Egypt." But when Moses made known to Pharaoh that was not God's way, he became very angry with Moses, and sent him away.

There was one thing more for God to do to teach Pharaoh that he was God over all, and that his idol gods were only foolishness. God told Moses and Aaron: "In the tenth day of this month, I will send the angel of death into Pharaoh's house, and into the house of every Egyptian, and the oldest son or daughter shall die; there will be one dead in every house, excepting in the homes of my people, the Israelites; they must put the sign of blood on their doors, and the death angel will not go into any house which has that sign upon it." God said: "Tell my people to get themselves and their cattle ready to leave Egypt that very night, for Pharaoh will surely let them go; at last he will be brought to obey the true God." The death angel came as God had said, and there was loud crying and great weeping when the Egyptians saw their dying children. Even before morning came Pharaoh sent for Moses and Aaron and told them, "Go serve the Lord as ye said, ye and all the Israelites; also take your flocks and your herds, and be gone, and bless me also." And we must know they lost no time in getting started, for before it was light they were moving out of Egypt. (The whole story should be read as it is to be found in Ex. 8 to 12. Young people and older ones too should also read the Egyptian Princess and Serapis, by George Ebers, books which are in every public library.)

OUR SUNDAY SCHOOL SUPERINTENDENTS' ROUND TABLE

—THE WORLD'S SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTION at Zurich is likely to be remembered as the time when uniform Bible study was extended from weekly study in Sunday schools to co-ordinated daily studies in homes, public schools and Sunday schools. On motion of the teachers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Million Bible Class, seconded and supported by Mrs. Mary Foster Bryner and Rev. Wm. A. Brown, both officers of the International Sunday School Association, and others, the World's Sunday School Association appointed an advisory supplemental lesson committee to submit to the International Sunday School Association, which meets in Chicago in June, 1914, a plan by which the Bible may be studied more consecutively and comprehensively than is possible in a six years' course of one lesson a week, through the assignment of related daily readings for homes and day schools that may be developed in five-minute studies in small text books for day schools and others for homes. One of these might give selections suitable for schools of young children, another for grammar grades, and yet another for high schools and colleges; and so for homes, with reference especially to the age of the youngest child capable of understanding at all. It is surprising that in a score of years of discussion as to how the study of the Bible can be made more adequate it has been almost universally assumed that the Bible study formerly done by homes, day schools and Sunday schools, with catechetical work by pastors also, must be done by that one of these four workers which has the least time and opportunity. There are places where daily home worship is still maintained, places where the Bible is not merely read, but studied daily in public and private schools, and where pastors do their duty in suitable religious instruction of children. There can be no doubt that if suitable assignments were made by Sunday school associations representing nearly all churches, thousands of homes, day schools and pastors would do their part in restoring Bible reading and study with even greater effectiveness than in the past, because these four agencies would be co-ordinated to make that study progressive and complete.

death of her merry, handsome, ital ward, and at the end the high, white bed, screened from the rest, and she, a round-faced child not yet thirteen, listening with ever-growing terror to the gasping, sobbing entreaties of the dying mother, on whose nerveless arm lay the week-old sister! She remembered how bravely she had promised never to let the child be taken from her, and the look of glad relief that came into the white, tortured face just before the never-ending peace had drawn its calmness on the thin features. Giuseppina knew she had kept her vow, but work and worry were wearing her out, money was scarce and growing scarcer. Stella was far from well-cared for, and in the "home" there would be no fear of unpaid rent or insufficient clothes. Mechanically the girl drew a small, blue card from the front of her dress. It was merely the businesslike announcement that on such a day "Stella Marie Cerina, aged five years, nationality Italian," was to be admitted to the "Mary Edwards Memoriai Home."

To-morrow—how fast the night was going!—Stella would be established in her new surroundings. No more roaring Signora Rossinis or coarse Rossini manners, dirty clothes, and chaotic meals. Stella would be one of neat rows of little blue gingahamed girls, who lived their lives to the systematic warning of a gong. It was best; it was wisest; the child should not suffer; and, as for what those idiotic gossips had said, it would never be true; she would put Stella in the home, but as to marrying Pasquale, they would see which was dearest to her, her sainted mother, or—a foolish boy.

Pasquale rose before her, so gentle and good, one man out of a thousand. "I can wait, Josephine!" he had said; "perhaps you will learn to like me by and by!" She, poor, hurried, unkempt little mill-worker, learn to like the best, the most wonderful—" The cold, white moonlight fell upon the troubled, oval face as with a sharp sob Giuseppina threw herself upon her knees.

"O God!" she gasped, bowing her head lower. "Don't let me want Pasquale!" she prayed. In the far corner of the room a small black head cautiously raised itself, and a pair of surprised eyes blinked sleepily; then Stella Marie lowered herself to the pillow, remarking mentally, "To-morrow I shall buy her a big chain of beads at the five-and-tener; then she won't cry!"

If Stella had not been so engrossed with her own plans, she might have noticed how very wearily her sister came downstairs, but as it was she was waiting eagerly for the moment when Giuseppina should start for the mill, and she, Stella, might sally forth on her shopping expedition. That Giuseppina broke out crying when their unusually long good-bys were said only stirred Stella's ardor to hastily procure the grief-dispeller. Watching her chance when Signora Rossini was arguing noisily over some rather elderly bananas a fruit-vender was trying to sell her, Stella Marie climbed over the back fence, scuttled down a short alley, crossed the car tracks, darted up another alley and over another fence, and was free. It was rather annoying to find she had overlooked the conventional necessities of both dress and shoes, but the sky was blue above her, and in her little brown fist lay all her worldly wealth in pennies and one nickel. She was on her way to buy her best beloved a gift.

Three o'clock in the afternoon found the young adventuress still roaming. Weeping wildly, her money having been lost in instalments and the five-and-tener apparently sunk into the earth, she wandered first up one street and down the next. To the few people who stopped to speak to her she replied with a fresh burst of grief and unintelligible requests.

"Io voglio Giuseppina; dove è Giuseppina?" "I want Giuseppina, where's Giuseppina?" But, alas for bewildered babyhood! the familiar sights and sounds of the Italian streets were all gone. Here everything was quiet and clean. Suddenly, at the end of a row of houses, something caught her eye. Sure enough, in the front window of a neat two-story house was a flag—an Italian flag. With a glad cry of recognition she ran up the steps and unceremoniously pushed the door open and walked in. There was no one in the bright, beribboned parlor, no one in the unheard-of dining-room, or in the shining kitchen. Stella Marie devoured some freshly baked cakes and then left the kitchen for further discoveries. Up the steep, brightly-carpeted stairs she dragged her plump, weary legs, and then, trudging through the open door of a bedroom, came face to face with a little old woman, who sat, sound asleep, in a big rocker. She had such a gentle, kindly face that Stella walked straight over to her and touched the idle hands.

"Wake up!" she said in Italian. "Will you be good to me?"

The sleeper woke with a violent start, and after staring at the little apparition before her, cried:

"Is this a miracle? Blessed God, have you sent her!" Stella, totally uninterested in this salutation, held out her arms, baby-like.

"Take me!" she sobbed, too weary and lonely to think anything beyond the fact that she had found a friend.

As the fond old arms gathered her close and the wrinkled face leaned against her dusty mop of hair, Stella could not know that to the humble spirit she was the miraculous answer to many an agonized prayer. She nestled confidently in the shelter of the arms, little understanding or heeding the incoherent murmur of love and solicitude her hostess poured forth. It was mostly concerning "Lina and Roma," but it gradually wandered into the more terrestrial subjects of bath and supper. But before the first considered function was fairly over, and Stella, soft and clean and brown, was wrapped in a warm blanket, the young adventuress was serenely asleep on the knees of her benefactress. The peaceful expression on the flushed old face was Madonna-like as she brooded over the little sleeper. Nearly fifteen years had passed since she had stood dumb and helpless between the white caskets of her two dead children, and now, as she had prayed for comfort, Providence had placed a live bambina in her empty arms.

In contrast with the serene contentment of Stella's present guardian was the wild and terrified wailing with which Giuseppina Cerina met the news that the distracted Signora Rossini conveyed, with admirable forethought, through the keyhole of the locked front door. The poor girl, half-crazed with fear and the self-reproach that unlooked for disaster inflicts, ran blindly down the street, hearing nothing but the wild cry her heart pounded out:

"Mia sorellina è morta! mia sorellina è morta!" "My little sister is dead!"

"Hey! where do you think you're going?" gasped the startled youth in whom Giuseppina's headlong race met with a sudden termination. But his growl of surprised discomfort changed suddenly to a cry of recognition.

"Why — why, Josephine! why, kid—!" She clung to him in the fast growing shadows and burst into Italian!

"Pasquale, my little sister is lost, is dead! She has been gone since morning! What shall I do? What shall I do? God help me! I shall die if my baby is harmed!"

THE YOUNG PEOPLE'S MEETINGS

NOTES ON THE CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR, EPWORTH LEAGUE AND BAPTIST YOUNG PEOPLE'S UNION TOPICS

The Christian's Perseverance*

THERE is a saying among the British people that the British soldier can be just as brave as any soldier in the world, and be brave for fifteen minutes longer. It is often that last fifteen minutes that win the battle. The beginning of a task may be easy; to keep at it will be harder; and to keep at it till it is really done is the hardest of all.

One of the most pathetic facts in the world is the fact that so many who begin the Christian race give up before they reach the end.

How can we make ourselves persevere? That is the practical side of this subject. What can we do to make sure that we shall not be among those who drop out of the race? What can we say to others that will help them to stay on the course till the race is run?

The great thing in running a race or doing a task is to keep one's heart on the goal. It is important to watch one's step and to take account of present circumstances, and be careful that each movement is skilfully made, but the thing that keeps us successfully at the task is the pull of the prize at the end, whether it be thought of as the victor's crown, or the finished task, or the smile of the waiting Master.

The writer of the Epistle to the Hebrews gives us the correct rule for perseverence. We are to run our race "Looking unto Jesus." When we realize who Christ is and what he has done for us; when we get the vision of his hope for mankind; when we realize how anxious he is that we shall do well and shall fulfil the part assigned us in the great task of saving the world—then it will not be hard for us to keep steady.

Another motive that should keep us true is the realization that if we slip, some one else will go down too. "No man liveth to himself." Every life is linked with other lives. If you persevere others will persevere; if you fall, others will fall.

There is no need of dwelling upon the horrors of failing to finish well. We must expect to finish well; we must determine to finish well; we must recognize that the God who promises to pardon and renew us also promises to keep us. Try to realize the wonder of the promises that have been made to us; try to realize the splendor of the rewards offered; try to realize the affectionate interest of the Saviour who died for us, and then "show the same diligence to the full assurance of hope even unto the end."

A noble army, men and boys,
The matron and the maid,
Around the Saviour's throne rejoice,
In robes of light arrayed.
They climbed the steep ascent of heaven
Through peril, toil and pain;
O God, to us may grace be given
To follow in their train.

Methodism in Bulgaria*

BULGARIA has been attracting world-wide attention lately. She was admired and praised for the leading part she played in the campaign of the Balkan allies against Turkey, and the present unfortunate struggle in which she is engaged with two of her former allies has brought her again into prominent notice. The Methodist Church began its work in Bulgaria in 1857, and while the accessions have not been large, a good hold has been secured and it is likely that when the country quiets down again after these bloody campaigns there will be more rapid enlargement and success.

In 1884 Miss Linna Schenck was sent by the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the M. E. Church to take charge of a girls' school at Lovetch. Miss Kate E. Blackburn and Miss Dora Davis are now in charge of this school, and Rev. and Mrs. Elmer E. Count are the missionaries at the head of the church work in Bulgaria, with headquarters at Sofia. The Conference report for 1912, which is said to be a repetition of the report for 1911, due probably to the difficulty of securing statistics while the war was going on, shows that besides these four missionaries there are fourteen native ordained preachers; 556 church members, and 153 probationers; 21 Sunday schools, with 800 pupils; 11 churches and chapels, and a total valuation of $20,820. One church has a vigorous Epworth League chapter of sixty members.

Mr. Count's report contains most graphic and interesting information about the part the Methodists, preachers and laymen, have played in the war, and the earnest work some of them have done for the spiritual welfare of their companions in the army. He writes: "One of our churches is made up almost entirely of Bohemians who have become citizens of Bulgaria. A large number of them were drafted into service. Thirteen of them happened to be placed in the same company. In the early morning, and somtimes on the march, or in the lull of battle in the evening, they used to get together and have a prayer-meeting. These thirteen simple-minded, earnest Christian men by their example made a deep impression on their regiment."

Pasquale laid a gentle hand on the girl's mouth.

"Zitto! zitto! Hush! hush!" he cried. "Non piangere! Do not weep, poor little one. I'm here—Pasquale, who will do anything under heaven for you and yours—and," he added suddenly in English, "Come on, kid, we'll go hunt up de cop!"

In the next two hours a dozen police stations and hospital offices were edified by the sight of a very handsome young Italian, his hair in a state of chaos, gripping a white, trembling, but surprisingly pretty girl by the hand and inquiring fiercely concerning the whereabouts of a child that had apparently vanished from all human ken.

"Tesoro mio! my treasure!" cried the poor boy at last, a suspicious break in his voice. "This does no good. My mother's home is near here; let me take you there and leave you with her until I find the bambina; for I will find her—" But his confidence was beginning to waver. "Come, cara mia, the mother will comfort you; she knows sorrow well. I have never told you I was the oldest of three children. My two little sisters were both killed by a—zitto, zitto, do not weep so, Giuseppina mia!—what have I said—what have I done, my poor little one?" Thank heaven, here was his own door, and beyond it the most loving mother-heart in the world. Almost carrying his half-fainting companion, Pasquale sprang up the steps and threw open the door through which he had hoped to lead his Giuseppina in triumph, and not drag her.

Radiant, unseeing, his mother stood before them. "My son," she cried, "a great blessing, a great miracle—"

"Santa Lucia—Santa Lucia!" broke in a cheerful baby voice, singing. Giuseppina stood still. "Bambina mia!" she said in a queer little voice and then fell forward.

When Giuseppina opened her eyes again she found herself in a sea of water on the Pontello floor, Stella whimpering beside her, and Pasquale, ashen from brow to chin, bending over her, while Mrs. Pontello waved vaguely at her with a folded newspaper. Joy is an unparalleled restorer, and though dizzy and weak Giuseppina struggled to her feet. Then followed explanations and joy, but poor Mrs. Pontello suddenly turned away and broke out crying.

"It is I who lose a child to-day!" she cried, fondling Stella's curls. "This little one I thought might be my own after all these lonely years. Ah, Pasquale, never did a mother have a dearer son, but thy little sisters were my babies, and I have lost them, lost them!"

With a caressing touch on the shaking shoulders, Giuseppina leaned over the old woman.

"Did you think I would take Stella away from you?" she asked gently; "I, who must spend the rest of this night on my knees in thanksgiving to the good God who has led her to you? May heaven reward you for your goodness to a motherless child. Keep her; make her your own!"

Mrs. Pontello, again peaceful and radiant, gathered her new and surprisingly docile possession in her arms and turned toward the stairs.

Giuseppina cried quietly until she felt that Pasquale was standing very near her.

"Giuseppina," he said unsteadily, "you've given little Stella to my mother; have you nothing for me?"

The girl stood up, too. There was bright color in her pale cheeks now, and the light of heaven in her eyes. She was ravishingly pretty, with her halo of soft dark hair, but to the love-sick boy she was unearthly in her beauty.

"Pasquale," she said, with a catch in her voice, "they say you have done well. All praise you—they say everything has come your way. everything you wanted without asking, and if Giuseppina Cerina is something you want—"

Pasquale was young; Pasquale was Italian and very much in love. What he did not say and vow by all the saints of heaven in the next few minutes was not worth saying or vowing. And so Mother Pontello, from her devotions by Stella's bedside, came down to find another blessing in her bereaved home, and the peace of heaven in the tear-filled eyes of the boy and girl who ran to meet and kiss her.

CLOUDED BRAIN
Clears Up on Change to Proper Food

The brain cannot work with clearn and accuracy if the food taken is n fully digested, but is retained in t stomach to ferment and form poisonc gases, etc. A dull, clouded brain is lik to be the result.

A Mich. lady relates her experien in changing her food habits, and resu are very interesting:

"A steady diet of rich, greasy foc such as sausage, buckwheat cakes a so on, finally broke down a stomach a nerves that, by inheritance, were sou and strong, and medicine did no appare good in the way of relief.

"My brain was clouded and dull anc was suffering from a case of constipati that defied all remedies used.

"The 'Road to Wellville,' in soi providential way, fell into my hands, a may Heaven's richest blessings fall the man who was inspired to write it.

"I followed directions carefully, t physical culture and all, using Gra Nuts with sugar and cream, leaving me pastry and hot biscuit entirely out of n bill of fare. The result—I am in perfe health once more.

"I never realize I have nerves, and n stomach and bowels are in fine conditi My brain is perfectly clear and I am e joying that state of health which Gc intended his creatures should enjoy ar which all might have, by giving prop attention to their food." ANSWERS TO FINANCIAL QUERIES

MRS. T. J., OHIO. (1) Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe ten-year convertible 5 per cent. bonds mature in June, 1917, and are now quoted at 99. During the panic of 1907 these bonds sold as low as 89½ and in 1910 as high as 123⅜. (2) Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul (Chicago & P. W. Division) five per cent. bonds are due January, 1921. These bonds are now quoted at 101½. They sold up to 122¼ in 1900 and as low as 105 during the panic in 1907. (3) Wabash 1st 5s are due May, 1939. These bonds are quoted at 102⅛. During the panic they sold as low as 99⅝. The panic prices for the three different issues are the lowest prices these bonds ever sold. (4) New York State 4½s are due in 1957 and are quoted to-day at 100. The bonds you have inquired about are regarded as expressing a very high type of conservative investment in railway issues.

MRS. R. E. M., ILLINOIS. For an investment for your $500 we suggest Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul convertible 4½ per cent. bonds, due January 1, 1932. The price of the bonds at present is 100½. Aside from what is believed to be their investment soundness stands the fact of their exchangeability into the common stock of the company at 100 (par) after January 1, 1917, and prior to June 1, 1922. The exchangeability or the conversion feature, we believe, makes them speculatively attractive, for the earnings of the St. Paul Railway are showing a decided betterment, and as the earnings of the road grow, the price of the stock should increase, and as the stock advances, the value of the bonds becomes greater. The earnings are sufficient at present to restore the common stock of the St. Paul to the 7 per cent. dividend basis from the present 5 per cent. rate, although the rate will not be changed this year, it is believed. These bonds may be had in denominations of $100 and $500.

A. W. C., KENTUCKY. This department has no record of the California-Nevada Mines Co. It is next to impossible for us to secure disinterested information about mining companies. Indeed, we have very little desire to compile statistics of mining companies, except those of the big copper producers, for we always advise our readers against mining speculation, believing that the poor showing made by the hundreds of thousands of new mining enterprises is sufficient reason for our attitude without the necessity of further explanation.

F. F. W., NEW YORK. You ask if the following exchange would be desirable: Wheeling & Lake Erie 1st Consolidated Mtg. 4s for American Pub. Ser. Co. 1st lien 6 per cent. bonds. You state that you bought Wheeling & Lake Erie 4s for 88. The bond is now quoted at 78, which shows a loss of 10 points. At 78 the bond yields 5.10 per cent. Personally we think the exchange desirable. The Am. Public Service bonds net 6 per cent. and in five years the extra per cent. that you will receive will make up the loss you sustained in selling your Wheeling & Lake Erie bond at 78. The American Public Service Company, a holding corporation for Texas gas and electric companies, is well put together and the subsidiaries are in populous and very flourishing cities in the Southwest. The earnings are large, and we believe are ample enough to fully secure the continuation of the 6 per cent. interest payments on the bond issue.

W. B. G., JR., RHODE ISLAND. You state that you own stocks of Adams Express Co., American Express Co. and the Wells Fargo Express Co., and that you are contemplating a sale of these issues, for "the very bottom seems to be dropping out of them." We believe the bottom has dropped out of these issues about as far as it is likely to drop, and there is a very strong possibility that the tendency from now on will be upwards rather than downwards. Believing as we do, we should surely hesitate to advise a sale. We do not believe that United States Government competition is going to destroy the usefulness of the express companies. We are told that only about 25 or 30 per cent. of the total business heretofore done by the express companies in interstate commerce has been business that the United States Government can hope to encompass and successfully transact. On the balance, that is the business that the government can compete in, the government cannot alone absorb it all, for private corporations can give a service that the government cannot offer to shippers of small parcels. If we owned express stocks and had stood by our holdings through the very persistent and disheartening decline in prices, now that they had reached such low levels we certainly should not sell and take such a loss.

F. J. T., HAVANA. You ask us to explain the failure of the Industrial Savings & Loan Co. It would be a long story to explain the causes that led to the failure of the Industrial Savings & Loan Co. It is sufficient to know that the company failed, and is now in the hands of the State Banking Department, which, through Mr. Haight, the deputy superintendent, is endeavoring to untangle the affairs of the concern. Mr. Haight expects to make a dividend disbursement of 10 or 15 per cent., probably in August.

Mrs. S. B. A., MICHIGAN. You ask that we give you the financial status of and the desirability of an investment in the first mortgage bonds of the Consolidated Coal Co. (Maine). These bonds seem to be well secured. There is an issue outstanding of $887,000, and they are subject to call on May 1, 1914, or on any interest date thereafter at 103 and interest. In order to redeem the bonds the company has maintained since November 1, 1910, a sinking fund secured by taking 10 cents from each ton of coal mined. No dividends are paid on the stock issue of $5,000,000, of which $2,699,100 has been issued. One unfavorable feature that must be commented on is the lessening of the total output of the eleven mines owned by the company. In 1912 a smaller tonnage was reported than produced in 1903, or any year since 1903. We do not know the reason for this shrinkage, but presume that it is due to the company's failure to keep the development work on its leases of 50,000 acres of coal lands fully apace with the lessening reserves. In considering a bond of this type it is quite necessary to determine the quality of the banking firm which makes you the offer, for on the strength and probity of the latter much depends. A strong banking investment firm is fully competent financially to furnish a market for the securities sold by the house, and this is also a very necessary consideration.

A. M. M., FLORIDA. You state that you have $5,000 for investment and desire to learn the value of the City of Tacoma, Green River Special Water Fund, No. 2 five per cent. bonds; Watertown Light & Power 1st 5s; Minneapolis Gas Light 1st 5s, and Portsmouth, N. H., 1st 5s. We regard these bonds favorably. Perhaps the most attractive two are the City of Tacoma Green River Special Water Fund 5s, and the Watertown (N. Y.) Light & Power first mortgage 5s. The Minneapolis Gas & Light 5s are also attractive bonds. The companies back of these securities are well managed, we believe, and the bonds were originally recommended and sold by strong banking houses who now stand by the market.

F. L. S., CONNECTICUT. The plan advertised by the Standard Grain and Stock Co. does not meet with our approval. Have nothing to do with it. "Puts and calls" is not a recognized form of speculation on the New York Stock Exchange, and is one of the most risky forms of Wall Street gambling.

REV. E. E. B., PENNSYLVANIA. You ask respecting an investment of $4,000. We offer the following suggestions:

$1,000 C., M. & St. P. Gen. Mort., 4½ per cent. bond at par.

$1,000 Atch., Top. & Santa Fe conv. 5 per cent. bond at par.

$1,000 Baltimore & Ohio conv. 4½ per cent. bond at 90½.

$500 C., M. & St. P. conv. 4½ per cent. bond at 101½.

$100 Keo. & Des Moines 1st 5 per cent. bond at 97½.

$100 Western Pacific 1st 5 per cent. bond at 80.

$100 Amer. Tel. & Tel. coll. 4 per cent. tr. ctf.

This utilizes approximately $4,000. All of these bonds are quickly marketable.

C. H. H., Amenia, N. Y. Your statement that "nowhere does the Bible say that women will be saved" is wholly wrong. There are many instances of godly women in both the Old Testament and the New Testament. The ministry of Jesus was to both men and women equally. Many of his most devoted followers were women. They were the last to comfort him on the way to Golgotha, the first to visit his tomb and the first to whom he appeared at his resurrection. The Epistles abound in tributes to godly Christian womanhood. See Rom. 16: 3, 6, 12, 15; II Tim. 1: 5; 4: 19, 21; Philemon 1: 2, II John 1, and many other passages in which the eminent piety of the women of the early church was duly recognized.

D. E. R., Gardiner, N. Y. Would a woman be justified in leaving her husband because he will not take her and their children to church and Sunday school? I don't mean when he refuses occasionally, but when he will not take her at all, and she has no other way of going.

It would be very wrong for a wife to leave her husband for such a reason as this. Read Paul's advice to the Corinthians, I Cor. 7: 12-16, particularly the last verse: "What knowest thou, O wife, whether thou shalt save thy husband?" The wife should persevere in her fidelity to Christ and in loving her husband. If the church is within reasonable walking distance she should walk to church regularly, not neglecting her household duties, but providing carefully for her husband's comfort. Even if the church is so far that the walking would require great effort and sacrifice she should make the attempt. Such patient heroism, accompanied by real affection, humility and faithfulness to home duties and earnest prayer, would probably win the husband's heart to Christ. If the children are too small to go with their mother or to be left at home without her, she should stay at home cheerfully, worshiping God there. A way out will be found if she keeps sweet and faithful. A neighbor may be induced to take her, and this might bring the thoughtless husband to his senses and to his better self.

C. D. L., Wyoming, Pa. The "communion of saints" (in the creed) is variously defined. Catholics hold it to mean the union between the church triumphant (in heaven), the church militant (on earth) and the church suffering (in purgatory), and make it the basis of saint worship and intercessory prayers. The Westminster Confession interprets it as meaning that all saints who are united to Christ have fellowship with him in his graces, suffering, death, resurrection and glory, and have also communion with each other in their spiritual life and exercises, in the performance of their daily duties as Christian people and in all good works, and especially in all activities that make for the advancement of Christ's kingdom on earth.

F. McD., Albany, N. Y. One of the most striking cases of successful evangelism, which was certainly not a money-making enterprise, is that of Mrs. Maggie Van Cott, better known as "Sister" Van Cott, who for over forty years was engaged in evangelistic work, and was instrumental in bringing thousands into the Gospel fold. She is now eighty-three years old, a rheumatic cripple, penniless, and wholly dependent upon a humble relative.

J. K., Selma, Md. Please give some facts concerning Swedenborg. Was he regarded as possessing superhuman foresight into the spiritual world?

Emanuel Swedenborg was born in Stockholm, Sweden, January 29, 1688. He was appointed by Charles XII assessor in the Swedish College of Mines, and distinguished himself as a scientist, engineer and writer. He believed himself divinely appointed to interpret the Scriptures and to found the New Church. He was a man of exemplary character and profound scholarship. His visions have been regarded by many as authentic. He claimed to be in frequent communication with angels and to have received his interpretations of the Scriptures from the Lord himself. He claimed also to have learned "the true states of men in the next life, the scenery and occupations of heaven and hell, the true doctrine of Providence, the origin of evil, the sanctity and perpetuity of marriage, and to have been a witness of the last judgment, or the second coming of the Lord," which, according to him, took place in 1757. It was in this year that the New Church, or the New Jerusalem, was inaugurated, and Swedenborg claimed to be "the divinely appointed prophet and teacher of its doctrines, and maintained that his revelations excel all that preceded them."

A. U. M., Hegins, Pa. A true Christian will endeavor to live and act in accordance with Christian principles. He will do nothing that "may cause his brother to stumble or offend"; he will avoid even "the appearance of evil"; he will not stifle the voice of conscience or compromise with sin; he will cultivate temperance in his own person and will help others to do likewise. He will engage in no business that involves the impoverishment or moral and physical degradation of his brother man.

Mrs. A. J. B., Pueblo, Col. The passage in Luke 7: 28 is frequently misunderstood, as being spoken in derogation of John, because of the doubt his messengers had implied in their question (verse 20). The true meaning, as Weiss and other commentators believe, is that Jesus was speaking of the differences in the success of the Baptist with certain classes. The common people and the publicans, who had repented under John's ministry, and had been baptized by him, understood the meaning of Jesus and were glad (verse 29), but the Pharisees and Scribes—the very class who should have been models of righteousness, had rejected and despised John. That Jesus spoke with this contrast in view is made clear in verses 30 to 35 inclusive. He was speaking of the advancement of the kingdom in the hearts of men.

Miss G. P., Towson, Md. 1. Bible chronologists have reckoned that Benjamin was born about 1899 B.C.; that Joseph was sold into slavery and went to Egypt three years later, about 1896 B.C.; the great famine began 1876 B.C.; Jacob went to Egypt 1874 B.C.; Jacob died 1857 B.C. Josephus, the Jewish historian, seems clearly to imply in his record of the doings of Joseph that he remembered Benjamin as a child in his father's house. 2. Write to the Scientific American, New York City, for information about indigo.

L. H., Lexington, Ohio. 1. The two chapters in the Bible that are alike are II Kings 19 and Isa. 37. Both are regarded as the work of Isaiah, relating a series of events which in one book are placed in their proper historical setting and in the other find their true place among the prophecies. 2. The origin of Christmas gifts is somewhat obscure, although they were clearly founded on the thought of God's gift to the world of his own Son. The Magi brought the first material Christmas gifts when they presented their love offerings. It was not until the sixth century that the Christmas celebration began to take form throughout the civilized world, but it seems to have been marked by salutations and love gifts from an earlier date.

Mrs. G., Minneapolis, Minn. The passage in Gen. 3: 15 is called by theologians the "Protevangelium," meaning the "First Gospel." It was the first divine announcement of a coming day when Satan would be crushed and his power destroyed. Many Bible scholars unite in recognizing it as a reference to the Saviour, who was to come of "the seed of the woman," and as setting forth his human-divine birth, his sufferings and wounds in the conflict and his final resurrection triumph.

M. A. D., Haviland, Kan. In Acts 2: 31, Peter, in quoting from Ps. 16, explained that David in the passage in question spoke not of himself, but of the descendant whom he prophetically foresaw and whom God had promised, viz.: the Messiah, whose resurrection from the grave he here predicted. The true rendering of verse 27 is "thou wilt not leave my soul in hades"—the grave, the tomb, the place of the dead.

F. E. F., Seaboard, N. C. 1. The passage in Heb. 1: 4 means that the Son, through his exaltation to the majesty of God, had attained to complete dominion over the world, and was thus, in both power and dignity, greater than the angels. In the second chapter Paul is dealing with the significance of the redemptive message, and all the circumstances connected with it. The Hebrews to whom he was appealing doubted whether Jesus, who was crucified, was really their Messiah, and he addresses himself to dispelling this doubt. In Heb. 2: 9, he shows that Jesus, for a short time in his humanity, was subordinated to the angels ("in all things as we are") (see verse 7); but with the completion of his sufferings and death, he is again crowned with exaltation in honor and glory. It was only by his voluntary humiliation that he could become the Mediator of salvation. 2. In the quotation in Heb. 2: 6 Paul quotes from Ps. 8: 5-7. His manner of quoting is a not unusual one where the hearers are familiar with the subject.

Reader, Elsmere, Neb. Write to Information Bureau, Patent Office, Washington, D. C., for instructions as to securing patents, and to Munn & Co., New York, for general advice on the subject.

S. L. M., Marshfield, Mo. You should engage a lawyer to procure the necessary forms and draw up application for incorporation. Three or more incorporators are needed. There are many kinds of corporations and a layman cannot prepare the forms acceptably.

DID you ever see a lion "look pleasant" for a camera man? This unusual picture was made at the Cincinnati Zoological Gardens when Brutus had an appointment with the moving-picture man to do some stunts while the man recorded them on his rolls of films. To start with, Brutus must have known that hundreds of people would see him in the "movies," for in the beginning he posed for a good face picture and held up one paw gracefully so that his big claws would show up to the best advantage. Just then the above picture was snapped, showing Brutus posing and the moving-picture man getting a line on the unique pose. Brutus did not hold it very long, for the expression was beginning to hurt his face.

BAPTIST YOUNG PEOPLE IN CONVENTION

THE TWENTIETH INTERNATIONAL ASSEMBLY OF THE BAPTIST YOUNG PEOPLE'S UNION OF AMERICA CROWDS THE GREAT BAPTIST TEMPLE IN BROOKLYN, N. Y.

"I SHOULD like to pick out the delegates to a convention like this. I would pick out the chronic snarlers, the grumblers and the kickers, which are to be found in every church—those who stand back and hinder instead of help—and I am sure the snarling would cease." If Dr. W. S. Abernethy, of Kansas City, Mo., who uttered these words, could have had his wish, many a Baptist Church throughout the land would have been made richer for the work of the fall and winter months as a direct result of the Twentieth International Convention of the Baptist Young People's Union. Nearly one thousand delegates were registered and every State from Maine to California, from Florida to Washington was represented. Illinois and Pennsylvania were conspicuous by their fine delegations. The spacious and airy auditorium of the Baptist Temple in the Borough of Brooklyn, N. Y., was beautifully decorated. The gallery fronts and choir loft were draped with white bunting, festooned with golden stars and edged with a deep golden fringe. The Stars and Stripes and the Union Jack were used with fine effect in many parts of the great room. Enthusiasm pervaded all the sessions, breaking out frequently in songs, cheers, or applause.

In the absence of the president, Dr. W. J. Williamson of St. Louis, Dr. Carl D. Case of Buffalo, vice-president, presided. In his opening address on "The Significance of the Convention," Dr. Case defined it as "an institute of methods." He quickened the spirit of alertness in the delegates when he said: "The significance of the convention will depend upon you—you who see and hear. If you are spiritually nearsighted its glorious vistas will not appeal to you. If you are spiritually deaf, the harmony of many voices and the melody of the Gospel strain will not touch your heart."

The pastor of the Baptist Temple, Dr. W. B. Wallace, gave a hearty and breezy welcome in behalf of the seventy Baptist churches of Long Island.

The note of optimism characterized the report of the Board of Managers which was presented by W. E. Chalmers, field secretary of the Union. "We record our conviction that the devoted hosts of young people who serve the Christ are growing rather than decreasing," were words that awakened hearty applause. This report pointed out that the Christian culture courses, which have always been an important educational feature of Baptist Young People's work, would be issued in book form with the co-operation of the commission of the Northern Baptist Convention on Young People's work, and would carry the approval of the International Christian Endeavor Society for use in Christian Endeavor Societies in Baptist Churches.

A fraternal message was sent to the Christian Endeavor meeting in Los Angeles, which elicited a hearty response from that convention and a special response from 500 Baptist delegates there.

Several sectional rallies were held on the first day of the convention. Probably the most largely attended was the New England rally, led by the president of the Connecticut State organization, Rev. Charles R. McNally. Workers' conferences were an important feature, forming the delegates into groups for special study, according as their interest centered in things educational, social, evangelistic, executive or in work along junior, missionary, membership or city and State Union lines.

One of the evening sessions took the form of "A Pageant of Peoples." It was a deeply impressive as well as informing and inspiring sight to see the representatives from many countries that are being woven into the fabric of our American life, as they came to the platform to tell of their common interest in the kingdom of God. There were Chinese, Finns, Hungarians, Italians, Letts, Poles, Russians, Scandinavians, Slovaks and Negro-Americans. As the songs and flags of many nations were blended in the praise of Christ and a common love and worship filled the great audience, Paul's words, "God hath made of one blood all nations of men," seemed wonderfully true. Dr. E. P. Farnham of the Brooklyn Baptist Church Extension Society and Rev. Charles H. Sears of the New York City Baptist Mission Society brought able messages on the subject of the new American population.

Not less interesting was the Sunday afternoon session, which was made a Judson Memorial meeting. Rev. John M. Moore of the Baptist Missionary Education Movement pointed out that the day, July 13, was the exact centennial of the first day Dr. Judson set his foot on Burman soil. Several of the young people from Brooklyn churches portrayed great events in Judson's life. Dr. J. H. Franklin gave an informing address on "Missionary Impressions from Japan, China, and the Philippines." A very pleasant part of this notable service was the presence of Dr. Edward Judson, son of the great missionary, whose words were a veritable benediction upon the host of young people.

The addresses throughout were of a high order. Rev. J. R. Webb, of Ontario, Canada, in an address on "The Work that Tells," declared that "if life is bounded by fifty or sixty years, there were many things not worth while," and emphasized the need for an eternal perspective. Dr. R. S. MacArthur swept a wide horizon in an address on "Young People and the World View." He spoke with great vigor and power. He held his audience up to the thought that the world view was the only intelligent view for the young people of this generation to take of the kingdom of God.

Professor E. O. Sellers of the Moody Institute, Chicago, spoke on "The Relation of the Bible School to the Young People's Society." His earnestness and definiteness earned appreciative applause.

The topmost note was touched in the convention sermon of Dr. John E. White of Atlanta, Georgia. His subject was "The Religion of a Master." His text from John 2: 5 was, "Whatsoever he saith unto you, do it." It was a masterly appeal for devotion to Christ as a personal Master. "The old-time religion," he said, "was good enough if we went back far enough for it. Original Christianity was the Gospel of a Person and the religion of a personal Master. The world seeks a master. The conditions of modern life are clamorous for unity and authority in religion. It is demonstrated that Christianity, complicated by other standards than Christ himself, inevitably flies off into fragments and presents to the world the appearance of a dispute between schools of thought. Christianity has the supreme message for the situation of the modern world, but it cannot be stated in abstract terms. The world will never receive it until it is presented in the living personal Christ offered to men as a Master, vital, individual and real."

The devotional spirit, which was emphasized by several quiet hours conducted by Dr. C. H. Dodd of Maryland, found a fitting climax in the address of Dr. J. W. Conley of Fresno, Calif., with which the most successful B. Y. P. U. A. convention held in many years came to a fitting close. C. R. McN.

CHRISTIANITY AND CITIZENSHIP

THE WORLD'S SECOND CHRISTIAN CITIZENSHIP CONFERENCE CONSIDERS PROBLEMS OF MODERN CIVILIZATION

FOR the first week of July the eyes of the entire Christian world were focused on the city of Portland, Ore. The second World's Christian Citizenship Conference began its sessions there on the morning of June 30, with hundreds of delegates representing practically every civilized nation in attendance. Over six hundred members of the conference gathered for the opening exercises at Multnomah Stadium. An attempt to name the distinguished members of that gathering would almost be the preparation of a roster of the leaders of religious and reform work of several nations. Dr. Henry Collin Minton, president of the National Reform Association, who presided at all the general meetings, read a message from President Wilson and emphasized it as the keynote of the entire conference. The President's message was:

"I want to express my hope that with vision and liberality combined the conference may help the country think out the applications of true Christianity to the problems of citizenship.

"It is certainly one of my deepest convictions that there can be no inspiration in the performance of public duty without the quickening of Christian principle."

Dr. Minton said in his address after reading this:

"The motive that has led to this conference has not been one of merely academic interest or of propagandic zeal. Rather we should say that the controlling desire has been to reach a common platform of sympathetic fellowship and of mutual confidence and service.

"Let us remember that it is only a conference for which we have come—this is no parliament to legislate. This is no convention to map out political policies and parties. Our purpose is broader, and, we believe, better than that. We are here to consider conditions, to exchange ideas, to mark out a program not of by-laws but of principles.

"The central theme of all our deliberations is that of citizenship. It is a strong and significant conviction which underlies the whole thought of this conference that while the organization of the state is human, its authority is divine. Every right of man is balanced with a duty and these rights and duties constitute the moral sphere in which the Christian citizen as well as the Christian state lives and moves and has his being. True citizenship hears the voice of God in every call to public service and realizes that it must render unto Cæsar the things that he Cæsar's, if it is fully to render unto God the things that be God's."

Rev. Robert F. Coyle of Denver delivered the formal opening address. He chose as his subject the words which President Wilson quoted in his inaugural address, "I am for men." Dr. Coyle said in part:

"'I am for men.' Whether that great champion of the people, Henry George, said it or not, it is a good platform to stand on. Some are for wealth, some for fame, some for power, but all who catch the music of the skies are for men. It was the platform of Jesus, the essence of all he lived for and bled for and died for. He had no other motive, no other mission. His whole earthly history is summed up in the sublimely simple declaration, 'I am for men.'

"Few things are more in evidence to-day than the over-emphasis of property and the under-emphasis of people. Only the blind can fail to see it.

"It is a severe indictment. But on this side of the water we live in glass houses and dare not throw stones. People are outweighed by possession. Man is lighter than dollars. The obscure citizen who sins against property is punished to the limit. The conspicuous capitalist who sins against human life, in mine, or factory, or sweatshop, or brewery, is exonerated and perhaps sent to Congress.

"Everywhere a cry is going up, a cry of discontent, a cry of protest. It is the cry of the masses for justice and liberty. The belief is growing, burning, clamoring in them that a man is worth more than a sheep. They are calling for a new appraisement of values, and if that call is not heeded, God only can foresee what the outcome will be. Is the picture too dark? Then I hasten to turn on the light.

"I see nothing so full of hope as the multiplying indications of a change of emphasis. This is the rising spirit of our day. It is emerging in religion. The typical Christian now is not fleeing from the City of Destruction, but staying in it, mixing in it, laboring to transform it into a city of God. The popular church, the victorious church, in the near time to come will be the one that dismounts, and pours in oil and wine and tenderly cares for the wounded man.

"This growing spirit of our times is manifesting itself toward every point of the compass. Politicians are catching the spirit and speaking eloquent words for the people. Even yellow journalism has caught the key and is singing, we trust, not altogether in mock heroics, 'the people, the people.'

"All these movements which I have touched upon are for men. Too long the law of the jungle has been the law of the market place. Now the mist of brotherhood, for weary centuries only a dream, is condensing into the rain of fact. By the inworking and outworking of the law of the Cross Christendom is slowly but surely becoming Christian. This is the law, the old Gospel, 'ringing down the grooves of change.'"

REV. CHARLES STELZLE
One of the Speakers on Labor

The conference was formally welcomed to the State of Oregon by Governor Oswald West; to the county by Circuit Court Judge T. J. Cleeton, and to the city by Mayor-elect H. R. Albee.

To give in this space any adequate description of the activities of the following days is quite impossible. Only some of the most impressive subjects and utterances can be given. On the day after the opening at the Stadium the conference was divided into sectional sessions so that a great number of subjects could be discussed. That morning three great problems came before the members of the conference. At the White Temple, Twelfth and Taylor Streets, the subject for consideration was "The Family"; at the Taylor Street Methodist Episcopal Church the subject was "Peace," and at the First Presbyterian Church, Twelfth and Alder Streets, the subject was "Capital and Labor."

Divorce as a menace to the family and the nation was painted in its true colors at the session of the conference in the White Temple. It is an evil, declared speakers, that threatens the disintegration of the family and the destruction of family life. Its poisonous current is sapping the foundations of the nation. Intelligent action by Christian and patriotic people is essential. Remedies, it was said, should be efficient. National divorce laws, reform of divorce court procedure, more solemnity in connection with the marriage ceremony, making it more difficult for the unfit to marry, educational effort starting with childhood, were outlined in addresses by Charles Merle D'Auhigne of Paris, Professor R. C. Wylie of Pittsburg, Rev. Edwin H. Delk of Philadelphia, Rev. James M. Wylie of Kansas City, and William Holderby of Pittsburg.

Inaugurate a plan of systematic discussion of the true meaning of the Christ doctrine of the Brotherhood of Man.

Inaugurate in denominational and interdenominational schools courses of instruction on the question of international conciliation.

Inaugurate agitation to the end of passing laws which will make the misrepresentation of facts of international difference, in newspapers or otherwise, libelous and punishable.

Regulate the requirements for American naturalization along lines of intellect, physical condition and morals, rather than along lines of race, color and nationality.

Foregoing are the principal recommendations contained in the report of the peace commission presented at the sectional conference on "Peace." The report was read by Professor Edward Krehbiel of Leland Stanford University, chairman of the commission. Dr. J. Boggs Dodds of Sterling, Kan. presided at the sectional conference.

The commission making the report consisted of the following: Dr. David Starr Jordan, chancellor of Leland Stanford, Jr., University; Baron Paul d'Estournelles de Constant, member of the senate of France, and representative of France at the Hague Court; Baron Sakatanik, mayor of Tokyo, Japan; Mrs. Fannie Fern Andrews, secretary of the American School Peace League, Boston; Ralph (Norman Angell) Lane, lecturer and author, London, and Professor Krehbiel.

Discussion of child labor and the curses that follow in its wake; the report of the capital and labor commission on the recent developments of the great labor problems, and an excellent paper on "Humanizing Industry," marked the Capital and Labor sectional conference. The commission's report, one that went deep into the heart of the agitation for a more equitable distribution of the world's products between the owner of the machines and the men who operate them, was read by R. B. Peery, president of Midland College, Atchison, Kan. The report and an address on "Child Labor Reform," by Dr. A. J. McKelway, of Washington, D. C., secretary for the Southern States National Child Labor Committee, were the features of the conference. By facts and figures garnered from every corner of the country he showed the wide extent of child labor, and the adverse effect it has ultimately upon industrial conditions as well as upon the child victims. In the afternoon there was a general meeting at the Stadium. There were musical numbers by the specially organized choir of the conference, and there were three addresses: "Our Social Problem; Is It Economic or Moral?" by T. H. Acheson, Ph.D., Pittsburg, Pa.; "Christianity as a Factor in Modern Italy," Signor Davide Bosio, lieutenant, royal army of Italy, Palermo, Italy; "The Social Teachings of the New Testament," Professor E. A. Wicher, San Francisco, Calif. That evening there was a further musical program and two addresses were delivered. Dr. Coyle spoke on "The Mormon Menace," and Dr. Ng Poon Chew, a distinguished Chinese editor, on "Christianity in the New China."

Prison reform, Social Purity, Intemperance and Public Education, were the topics for discussion at the four sectional meetings of the third day. Many able addresses on these subjects were delivered and comprehensive reports by commissions appointed to investigate them were made.

"Religious instruction in State educational institutions without teaching the doctrines of any particular creed or sect is necessary to the welfare of the people of the United States." Such was the argument advanced by the speakers of the sectional conference on Public Education. "There is nothing more fundamental to the life of the State," said Dr. James S. Martin of Pittsburg, "and certainly nothing more fundamental to her character and the fulfilment of her mission than the nature of the instruction she imparts to her youth, and that, too, in her own educational institutions. There is general agreement that the youth of the State should be trained in morals. But what shall be the basis of this moral training? Ay, there's the rub!

"God has so made every human being that his conscience will respond to naught but divine authority even as the eye responds to nothing but the light and the ear only to sound. Put the dynamo of religion back of morality and you have something worth while. All history shows that morality to have life and force must have its roots in religion."

The sectional conferences of the following day covered the subjects of Immigration, the Sabbath and Mormonism. In the afternoon there were addresses on general topics at the Stadium and in the evening a program of music and short speeches.

OPIUM CULTIVATION IN SOUTHERN PERSIA

Opium Ready to be Gathered

BY LIEUT.-COLONEL ARTHUR HEINICKE

HE cold season in Southern Persia is short, but occasionally so severe that snow falls plentifully round about Shiraz, the capital of rs, but in most winters only heavy ns prevail. There is a considerable riation in the temperature on the coast d on the lofty plateau in the interior of e country. A beautiful spring follows e intense cold, and in the month of rch, while the highest mountains still ry white snowcaps, the valleys are owing green, the wild flowers blossom erywhere, and the world-famous Per-n roses in the gardens round about iraz are already in bud.

Very soon the refreshing spring shows cease; summer approaches rapidly in is part of the world, and with the hot eather gusts of wind, driving before em clouds of dust, rush through the rtly cultivated plains and over the pening fields. When this time arrives, e poppies are in full blossom, and the breeze is laden with the narcotic odors the large delicate white flowers, which are mixed here and there with beau-ful shaded violet ones. After a favorable rainy season the poppy fields are lovely sight, and a beautiful feature in the landscape. The plants stand gh and healthy on their tall, straight stems, and within the majestic flower on appears a large, fleshy poppy-head, which contains the opium juice and so later, when dry, the valuable poppy seeds. Such a sight is a delight to the wner of the plantation, for he sees in prospect a glorious harvest. Round out Shiraz, as far as Ispahan, southward to the country of the date palm, a eat deal of opium is grown and several thousand chests are shipped from iraz to China and various other large centers of the trade every season. he collecting of the opium juice begins in June, when, the flowers having ded and the leaves fallen, the poppy-heads are ready to be bled. For this rpose a peculiar knife is employed. It has a thick handle in which several in, short blades an inch in length are set, and with which several parallel its may be made with one stroke. When the sun stands low on the western rizon, the men with these tools start their work, making one or two incisions the fleshy green skin of the heads on the side towards the setting sun. uring the cool night hours the brown, strong-smelling, viscous juice oozes out d collects in pearl-like drops on the surface of the seed-vessel.

Before the rising sun gains sufficient power to dry or crystallize the sticky bstance, the gathering is in full swing. Stepping carefully from plant to lant, the men gather the opium on the broad blades of their crescent-shaped llecting-knives, which have an upturned back about an inch high to prevent e juice from dropping off. As soon as a knife is full, it is handed to the wner of the field or his foreman, who stand among the collectors to see that one of the precious drops are hidden away by the workers to increase their daily wages. As soon as the morning work is over, the fields are deserted until the afternoon, when new incisions have to be made. Each plant is topped twice, and a large poppy-head gives from twenty to thirty grains of opium. A few days are sufficient to finish a field, then the poppy-heads are left alone and, robbed of their juice, the sun soon dries them up. In a few days they begin to shrink and change color, and when they are quite withered and have assumed a yellow-brownish tint, they are gathered by children, collected in heaps on a suitable spot, and threshed out with long sticks by women.

PREPARING PERSIAN OPIUM FOR SHIPMENT

The seed is then winnowed out preparatory to its sale and export. It contains about 40 to 50 per cent. of oil, which is largely used in France, on the continent, and other countries in the place of olive oil, which it resembles closely. It contains no opium.

The juice is sold in large copper vessels by the grower to the merchant, in whose hands it undergoes several processes in order to preserve it from fermentation and decay. On sunny, fine, hot days, the Persian caravanserais, where opium dealers have their magazines, present an interesting picture. The juice is brought out to be prepared into cakes for export.

On large wooden boards, two and a half feet long and one and a half feet broad, the sticky mass is spread out with spade-like tools to permit the water it contains to evaporate. Experienced workers move from board to board, turning over the layers every now and then, that the heat and sun may dry up the exposed surfaces and render the opium fit for making into cakes. In favorable weather this process takes only an hour or so, and the opium is ready for the next manipulation.

It is now scraped off and is rolled into stiff, dough-like lumps and handed to a man who divides it into smaller portions weighing one pound each, which he passes on to molders, by whom they are pressed into the wooden forms and then laid on a large board for the final drying process. When this is completed, the cakes are rolled up in red paper imported specially from China, and are then tied up with red strings. The cakes are then ready for packing. One hundred and forty-four are put in tin-lined wooden cases with poppy-stem chaff as packing. The wooden cases are covered with strong hides and sacking. Two cases form a mule load. The percentage of morphia in Persian opium varies from 9 to 12 per cent.

Much opium is used in Persia itself; in fact, the consumption has grown to a deplorable extent, which causes considerable anxiety to the authorities. There are opium dens in every large town, and the sickening sweet smell arising from the opium pipes streams out of every tea and coffee house in the country. The distressing spectacle of intoxicated opium smokers may be seen everywhere in Persia, and those who do not care to smoke the drug have taken to the small pillbox found in every Persian breast-pocket. Now and then efforts are made to put a stop to this use of the dangerous drug, but in vain, and so long as its cultivation is permitted and the highest officials indulge in its use, no restrictions will be effective in preventing the lower classes from ruining themselves.

Persia is doomed, and its downfall cannot be arrested.

TOPICS OF INTEREST AT HOME AND ABROAD

—Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman has returned after two years' evangelistic mission in Australia. He has been invited to pay another visit to hat country in 1914.

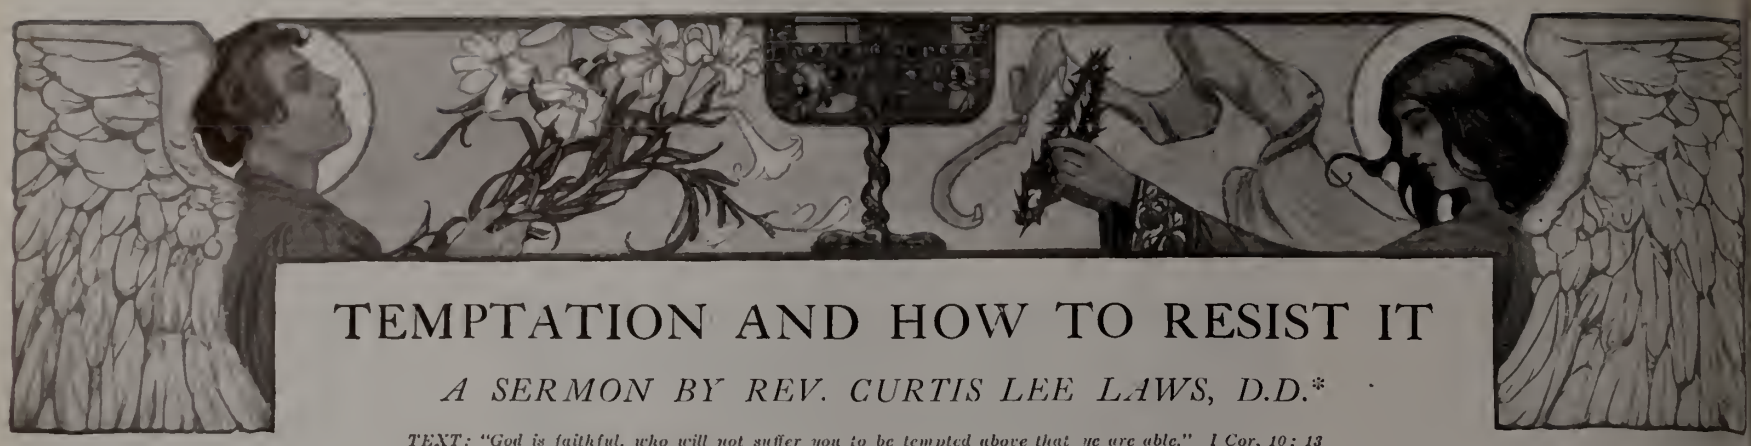
—A company of Mystic Shriners, on passing hrough Sanderson, Texas, on Sunday, May 11, topped the train for an hour, and, headed by heir hands, marched to a church large enough o hold the 150 visitors. In the absence of any inister or church official, prayer was offered, n address was given by the mayor of San Diego, selections of sacred music were followed y the singing of the doxology. The $50 collection was left with a neighbor to be given to the pastor. This is believed to be the first time on record "in Shrinedom" when a train has been stopped and held for the celebration of divine service.

—Miss Susan E. Haswell, the well-known missionary of Ahlone, Lower Burma, writes that the lieutenant governor and council have at last made a grant to her mission school of 13,500 rupees, on condition that the mission raise an equal amount and that the new building be under way before April of next year. A great effort is now being made to raise the money, which will guarantee the future of this excellent work.

—Dan Crawford, the author of Thinking Black, is announced to speak during the general Northfield Conference in August. He comes with twenty-two years of unbroken service to his credit in the wilds of the Garengauzi country of Africa. He has made an extraordinary reputation in England as a captivating and original speaker.

—Mr. Charles W. Morton, an earnest and successful soul-winner, died at Atlantic City on May 18. Although a man of wealth, Mr. Morton's chief interest was in the heavenly kingdom, and his lay-sermons and earnest personal work were blessed to the good of many souls. He was especially interested in the work of the Pennsylvania Hospital in Philadelphia.

—The revival in South Bend, Ind., closed June 15 with the record of 6,398 professed conversions. $24,727.98 were collected, of which $10,500 was a "special offering" to Evangelist W. A. Sunday, who conducted the meetings. The campaign, which lasted seven weeks, was the most notable religious event in the history of Indiana.



TEMPTATION AND HOW TO RESIST IT

*A SERMON BY REV. CURTIS LEE LAWS, D.D.

TEXT: "God is faithful, who will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able." I Cor. 10: 13

AS THE devil tempted the Son of Man, he continues to tempt the sons of men. We long for the hour when our adversary will leave us, or for the hour when we shall be able to conquer him. In a thousand ways he approaches the citadel of our hearts. Our bodily senses, our mental powers and our spiritual appetences are all avenues through which this astute general would march his forces of evil into our hearts and lives. Woe to the man who no longer feels the need of watchfulness.

It was the Master who had himself measured strength with the foe who said, "Watch and pray, lest ye enter into temptation." Try to realize that self-security means insecurity, that overconfidence is perilous and therefore criminal. Fortify the approaches of your heart. "Let him that thinketh he standeth, take heed lest he fall." Let us beware, if we have come to feel that the adversary no longer seeks our destruction. The hunter gives little thought to the game that is already bagged. With men and women who long for victorious living, life is one long temptation and this world a veritable battle-ground. The devil disputes every inch of our progress. He is ever lying in ambush seeking our destruction, and his lieutenants are ever at our side whispering seductive temptations. These agents of evil are at our eye-gate, our ear-gate, our thought-gate, and with fiendish glee do they rush in whenever we give them a chance.

My text is a strong consolation to those who are consciously fighting this battle with the powers of darkness.

Temptation the Common Experience

"There hath no temptation taken you but such as is common to man." This does not seem possible. Can it be that other men have been tempted just exactly as I have been? That I have never had a peculiar or unique temptation? The text declares that thousands of others have fought over the same ground and have met the same enemy. Some won the victory, some went down in defeat. The Son of God himself, the good and the great of all ages, as well as the wicked and the insignificant of all ages, have had to meet temptation. The evil one has been at his business a long time, and I suppose is becoming more and more proficient. Our temptations are differentiated by our characters, our positions, our environment, but all have to meet the same vindictive and deceitful enemy. No place in which we may dwell will give us immunity from temptation. St. Anthony found the temptations of the wilderness more seductive than the temptations of the city. The brick walls of monasteries and convents cannot keep the enemy out. No circumstances of life will give immunity from temptation. The enemy is hard to outwit. In poverty there are temptations, but not more than in wealth. It is so with youth and old age. The aged idolater worshiping his gold warns the young to flee youthful lusts! Temptation then is the common and universal experience of humanity.

Our Lord was tempted in all points like as we are and yet he was perfect in the sight of God and man. Some men and women lament their low spiritual estate and think themselves sinners above all others because they are so much tempted. Temptation in one's life is no proof of sinfulness. Sometimes it is the very opposite, for I suppose Satan hates the best people most. Terrible were the temptations to which the Master was subjected! It must have been because the devil hated him so intensely that he made war upon him so furiously. Temptation is outward solicitation striking hands with internal desire. Sin begins only when temptation leads the will captive. But if the will stubbornly refuses consent, honestly decides upon a contrary course of action, and immediately orders the intruder out, there is no sin, but on the contrary victory. Do not then think that you are vicious because you are tempted to do wrong. God would not let the devil tempt his children if temptation meant sin. Frequently there is the ready consent of the will and then also there is sin; it may be in desire only, it may be in desire and purpose, it may be in desire, purpose and act.

Temptation Cannot Force Us to Sin

God will not allow us to be tempted above that which we are able to bear. His word is pledged to that. No man is therefore forced to sin. It is simply the effort of the evil one to persuade. He cannot force. It is beyond his province. God distinctly says that he will not allow it. If I sin or if you sin then it is either because we love sin and want to sin and purpose to sin, or else because we have not accepted God's way of escape from temptation. Now if we will take God at his word and follow the path which his Providence and his Spirit point out, we may escape much of sin by refusing to yield to temptation. The apostle plainly says that God will with the temptation make the way of escape that we may be able to bear it. Surely we want to know God's method of resisting temptation. We have that method clearly laid down in this good old Book. Let us then turn to it and find the way of escape, the way to certain victory.

Watch and Pray

We are to watch and pray lest we be led into temptation. This is an exhortation to prudence, caution, common sense. Though temptation will come into our lives, we have no moral right to seek it. On the contrary we must pray, "Lead us not into temptation," and then we must use our common sense to avoid the pitfalls into which the devil would inveigle us. Many a man feels so strong that he lays down his weapons, and then, of course, the evil one wins an easy victory. I have known men who deliberately courted temptation, and then complained that they could not help yielding. If we are in earnest about leading the victorious life, we will at once begin to watch and pray lest we enter into temptation. We will gladly stay away from the old companions and the old haunts. We will never go where liquor is sold or used, if we have an appetite for it. We will eschew all kinds of games of chance if we have ever had the gambling passion. We will not allow ourselves to be persuaded by any of the infernal customs of society, which are but the devil's emissaries. Better never to attend a reception than to have the emissaries of the evil one overwhelm us. We may well thank God that the wineglass is less common in social life than in former days. Now, if a person will not use the ordinary prudence, he proves that he is either a fool or a knave, when he declares that he wants to live a victorious life. The first advice which our Master gives us is that we shall keep away from temptation. But when we have been as careful and prudent as possible, we shall still be hunted down by our enemy. The Master has advice for us in these new circumstances.

"Resist the Devil"

There is a world of value in this advice. It is true that if we resist the devil, he will flee from us. However we safeguard ourselves, the devil will find us out, or hunt us down. However carefully we guard the weak spots in our moral defenses, the devil will attack us just at these spots. We must resist him, we must fight him to the finish. If we do so, he will flee and we shall win the victory. Unless there is immediate resistance, there will be immediate sin. Not to resist is to acquiesce, and to acquiesce is to yield. God regards us as intelligences, and not as machines. Hence we are not acted upon, but we are the actors. The will must assert its supremacy and order the usurper out. There must be no wavering, because that would be tolerance, and tolerance would be yielding. In this fight we are to use that intelligence with which God has endowed us. Our intelligence teaches us that we are stronger to deal with the tempter when he first enters our hearts. If we would only resist the first approaches of the devil, we could easily conquer him. Then the temptation is weak and we are strong, but soon the conditions are reversed. The enemy is said to aim at us his fiery darts. At first there is only a spark. How easily we could put it out if we only would! Yonder burning house defies the heroic efforts of the brave firemen; the flames leap up and out, and the neighboring houses catch, and on and on the fire sweeps; the red glow is against the sky, great walls crash and crumble, and on and on the flames sweep as they lick out their fiery and glowing tongues. Half a city is reduced to ashes. But had that fire been taken in time yonder little girl could have quenched it with a pitcher of water. Oh, then, crush out that first suggestion of evil, lest by your delay it grow into the giant who will throttle you. But again to parley with temptation is to yield. How often do we hug a temptation to our heart and feel that we will not yield, but that we cannot banish it entirely from our lives! Thus to fondle temptation is to be guilty of the sins so severely denounced by the Master in the Sermon on the Mount—the sins of thought, the sins of desire and the sins of purpose. Men and women, we can't be saved in the hour of temptation unless, deep down in our hearts, we want to be saved. Then we will rise up and make a gallant fight and our God will help us to win the victory.

Our Friend and Helper

"We have a High Priest who is touched with the feeling of our infirmities, for he was in all points tempted like as we are, yet without sin." This sympathizing friend is willing and able to help us. He has the ability of sympathy. This was born of his own experience. He knows just what it is to suffer the assaults of the evil one, and, thank God, he knows just how to conquer him. He has therefore the ability of power. He did battle royal with the adversary and conquered him. He is willing to help us, that in his power we also may conquer. So Satan well may tremble when he sees the humblest saint upon his knees. He knows what it is to be conquered by Jesus Christ, and we can make him tremble by pointing to Calvary and the empty tomb.

But we may also claim Jesus Christ as our friend and companion by the way. The more intimately we fellowship with him, the more constantly we bask in the sunlight of his presence, the less power temptation will have over us. The best way to break the spell of the siren-song of temptation is to open our souls to the diviner influence of celestial music. The attraction of temptation is best overcome by a counter attraction. The love of Christ in the heart destroys the love of sin. "Be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good." "Walk in the Spirit, and ye shall not fulfil the lusts of the flesh."

Childhood

WHEN God made the child he began early in the morning. He watched the golden hues of rising day chasing away the darkness, and chose the azure of the opening heavens for the color of childhood's eye, the crimson of the cloud to paint its cheeks, and the gold of the morning for its flowing tresses. He beheld the dew-drops upon the lips of flowers, and from rose and lily and daffodil and daisy gathered nectar wherewith to put sparkle in its eye and merry smiles upon its lips. He listened to the song-birds as they sang and warbled and whispered, and strung childhood's harp with notes now soft and low, now sweet and strong. He saw the little lambs among the flocks romp and play and skip, and he put play into childhood's heart. He saw the silvery brook and listened to its music and ripple as it coursed its way over sandy bed and mossy stone, and he made the laughter of the child like the ripple of the brook. He saw the angels of light as on wings of love they hastened in holy duty, and he put innocence in the child-heart and formed its soul in purity and love. And having made the child, he sent it out to bring joy in the home, laughter on the green, and gladness everywhere. He sent it to the home and said to the parents: "Nourish and bring up this child for me." He sent it to the church and said: "Teach it my love and law." He sent it to the state, saying: "Deal tenderly with it, and it will bless and not curse thee." He sent it to the nation and said: "Be good to the child. It is thy greatest asset and thy hope."

DAILY MEDITATION

FOR EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR

BY REV. J. H. JOWETT, D.D.

SUNDAY, August 3. Acts 7: 30-37. In all the swiftly changing incidents of Israel's history there was the abiding presence of God. There is very varied life upon a liner, but over all the manifold movements the captain is on the bridge. There is a governing will, directing a common tendency, and all the different motions are merged in one movement which seeks a definite end. Moses was often plunged into confusion. Affairs often seemed inextricable. But the unseen One was in control! Things were being steered even when disaster seemed imminent. God never surrendered his command. "He that keepeth Israel shall neither slumber nor sleep."

We are tempted to doubt God's watchfulness. We are tempted to think that chaos reigns and that we are the only ones who see the disorder. Just now the world is full of tumult. Everywhere traditional landmarks are being removed, and men are striding over very venerable barriers. You hear people whisper "What are we coming to?" And this is the answer: We are coming to "the holy city," the "New Jerusalem"; to "a new heaven and a new earth," wherein dwelleth righteousness. God is awake! And God is watching! And the unrest of the nations is just the ferment of the Holy Spirit: we are moving out of Egypt to the New Canaan of brotherhood and peace.

MONDAY, August 4. Exodus 12: 1-14. "This month shall be unto you the beginning of months." And it was the month of the springtime, when the day was lengthening, and the sun was ascending, and everything was beginning to revive. The Passover was to be associated with the spring, with the break-up of the winter, and a glorious resurrection. And so it is with the greater Passover, of which the Egyptian Passover proved to be only a symbol—it too is significant of spring, the end of human bondage, and a resurrection to immortal hope and freedom.

Do I know this spiritual spring? Do other people know that I know it? Are there spring-tokens about my conduct and demeanor? Are there any "tender leaves of hope?" Is there any crocus of lowliness? Is there any bird-song in the air? Is there a "feeling" in the atmosphere as though Jesus must be near? If there is springtime in my soul then my neighbors will know it. There will be a quickening as though noble things were at the birth. There will be a geniality in which burdened people will find it easier to breathe. And there will be a spirit of optimism in whose presence the desponding shall take heart again. When our souls are at the springtime we shall be welcome guests with all who aspire after the beauty of holiness.

TUESDAY, August 5. Exodus 12: 21-31. "When ye be come to the land which the Lord will give you . . . ye shall keep this service." That is our difficulty, to keep the remembrance of our deliverance in the days of our freedom. Freedom sometimes acts as a drug, and we forget our Emancipator. In Canaan, "the land flowing with milk and honey," we forget the bondage of Egypt. Our very blessings may make us unmindful of our God. That is our peril. Our very plenty may put us into a deep sleep.

It is a beautiful thing to hold a daily memorial service in remembrance of our deliverance. Nothing more enriches a life than a vivid and retentive sense of our blessings. The songs of Canaan would be all the more rapturous if we remembered the wonderful breaking up of our Egyptian servitude. The gift of health would be more deeply enjoyed if we remembered our pilgrimage through sickness. Every life should have its own daily service when the goodness of the Lord is rehearsed. "Call to mind the days of old!" Recall the miracles of yesterday! Let memory travel back to Egypt, and Canaan itself shall become a fairer home.

WEDNESDAY, August 6. II Chronicles 30: 13-20. "There were many in the congregation that were not sanctified." And these people always affect the atmosphere of public worship. They reduce its spiritual fervor, its moral temperature. Icebergs exert a chilling influence for miles around. And unsanctified souls send "lowering" airs through the whole congregation. "No man liveth unto himself": he helps to freeze or kindle the souls of others. His influence is born of icebergs or of the sun.

What would a congregation be like if every worshiper were like "a live coal from off the altar?" What would a church be like if the character of every member glistened with the radiance of holiness? No social evil would be able to withstand its consuming flame. Prodigal men and women, their genial currents frozen in the wintry bondage of sin, would draw near as to a friendly and hospitable hearth. A sanctified church would dominate the world.

"Hezekiah prayed, saying, The good Lord pardon every one. . . . And the Lord hearkened to Hezekiah, and healed the people." And, blessed be God, that is our resource to-day!

THURSDAY, August 7. II Chronicles 35: 11-19. "And the singers were in their place, . . . and the porters waited at every gate." And Levites, and singers, and porters all kept the Passover! The singer was sanctified in his office, and the porter in his, and they were both one in the holy blessing of God. There is no wisdom in our assigning ranks in the service of the Lord. Prominence does not make office great, neither does obscurity belittle it. The blessing of God endows every office with majesty, and ranks the porter with the priest. My rank is not determined by the size of my station, but by my willingness to receive the grace of God. And thus the porter may rank above the Levite because he may be more akin to God.

Let the porter therefore think that his threshold may be as hallowed as the pulpit or the altar. Let the fisherman think that in the olden days his kinsmen in toil were the intimate friends of the Lord. Let every manual laborer remember that the Lord of glory once worked in a carpenter's shop. Wherever our lot is cast we may make the place of our feet glorious. A mystic light may be on the cobbler's bench, and on the porter's lodge, and on every common implement of daily toil.

FRIDAY, August 8. Ezra 6: 16-32. "All who had separated themselves from the filthiness of the heathen . . . did eat." How can we keep the Passover in uncleanness? How should we tolerate an unclean guest at our own table? And how can we thrust ourselves in filthy rags to the table of the Lord? "Friend, how comest thou in hither not having a wedding garment?" His guests must wear the white robe. But where can we obtain the garment? The webs which I have woven are marred with unclean strands. The dirt is in the stuff. I have no power to cleanse it. Whence, then, shall I appear pure in His presence?

The Lord of the feast will himself prepare his guests. There is a robing-room, where his mercy-seat is found, and where are kept "robes of righteousness and garments of salvation." And heavenly ministries wait upon the humble, willing guests, and with the waters of forgiveness remove from them all the stains and filthiness gathered along the way. And the garments are changed, and they become clothed in spiritual attire suitable to those who sit at the King's table. And he calls them his separated ones, and he sups with them, and they with him. "They have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb."

SATURDAY, August 9. Luke 22: 7-20. "And He took the cup and said, Take this and divide it among yourselves." And the wine is the symbol of his sacrificial death, and it is to be divided among all the children of men. The holy and mysterious benefits of his death are to be shared by everybody. I am trying to imagine what the world would be like if this mystic wine of life possessed and quickened every soul. Everybody sharing the vitality and virtue of the Lord! And therefore everybody spiritually alive, sacrificial, self-forgetful, and finding his own delights in the joys of others! The Lord Jesus divided among us, and so making us one in a purified and glorified humanity!

And I, too, can have my share. The cup is handed to me. I, too, can drink of his blood, and receive into my own anemic life the glorious energies of his victorious health. All that Jesus has and is I am permitted to share: His holiness, his power, his joy, his peace.

But I may lose my share if I have no concern for the health of others. The cup is purposed to be divided among the Hindus, and the Japanese, and the almost countless hosts of the Chinese Empire. Have I carried the cup to them? Am I concerned for their share in the holy wine? Or have I no care except that the cup should come to me? "He that findeth his life shall lose it."

AND A LITTLE CHILD SHALL LEAD

AT THE corner of the street just under my hill in Seoul, Korea, lives Cheung. He is a thatch-vender, which occupation has rendered him two benefits: one, money to buy drink with, and the other, rest and refreshment. Cheung was no common drinker, with only a red nose and bleared eye to show for it, not he. He was known to his world in general and to Seoul in particular as a man who could terrify the onlooking multitudes by the awful manner of his spree. A hard, raucous voice he had and a pair of foghorn lungs, a willowy kind of body, too, loosely hung together, that could swing to and fro, double up and right itself, go all ways at once, and yet never lose its footing. These exercises were preliminary to a regular periodical outbreak in the middle of the street. He accosted every man that went by. If no reply was forthcoming, he would swing off after the passer with ugly menaces and threatenings. Something had gone wrong with the entire universe in the mind of Cheung. He talked to himself, kicked high at the stone wall just in front, flung odds and ends, cast dust in the air, and swore dreadful oaths. With all the spirit in him inspired to wild activity, he would jump and whirl till he was ready to explode from the vehemence of it. For a demon of uproar, nothing surely ever surpassed Cheung. The police, like the Levite, went by on the other side, and the street periodically yielded itself up and lay prone while Cheung had his innings.

Suddenly a day came when it ceased. Cheung was gone. Some one looking a bit like him, but refined and purified, was seen going by with quiet and softened step to a neighboring meeting-house. He carried a New Testament and was seen by the same wondering world with his face to the floor praying to God. Dates arrived for returning uproars, but these came to pass no more. Month followed month and the old spirit of confusion was evidently dead. Cheung is a quiet, oldish man now, gentle in all his ways, whose lips have been touched to say "Thank God."

How came it about? A little daughter of his was sent to the Mission school. She learned her lessons and her young heart drank deep of the teaching. She learned to pray and read and to tell others of what she had found that was wonderful. How she approached that wild father of hers, what she said, how her child-faith grappled with his untamed soul, with what soft influences she wooed him away from his world of wild lawlessness and landed him safe in a region of eternal calm, I know not. She is but a plain, low-class girl, with poor ancestry and a homely face, but, like Daniel of old, the spirit of the Eternal is in her, and she is in touch personally with that great and wondrous Mystery, who deals in "broken earthenware." J. S. GALE.

MEN AND EVENTS IN THE WORLD'S NEWS

THE first jury of women ever called in the United States rendered a verdict of not guilty in a felony case in Judge Dunn's court in San Francisco on July 7. The court room was crowded when the women jurors took their seats. A special press despatch describes the proceedings in these words: "The judge appeared at eleven A.M. and cast his eye over the jury. He looked vexed when he noted the absence of one juror. He signed a few papers, and then was about to postpone the case when the delinquent, a prominent clubwoman, came in, flushed and breathless, and was escorted to her seat by the bailiff, under the reproachful eyes of her fellow jurors. She had given the female jury a bad reputation for punctuality before it had got fairly started. Eleven of the women in the box were married and had a mature look. The twelfth was single and much younger than her associates. All were smartly dressed. Several appeared nervous when they saw a number of photographers in the room.

America's First Jury of Women Acquits a Woman

AMERICA'S FIRST JURY OF WOMEN

She is young and comparatively pretty—which, of course, had no weight with a female jury. Perhaps the defendant thought of that when she demanded a jury of women. Mrs. Robinson told how she had received a letter from an unknown person, who, she said, was subsequently found to be Mrs. Williams, the defendant, in which she was directed to pay $150 to a messenger who would appear at a stated time.

"Then the accused testified that she wrote the letter as a joke and had no intention of blackmailing Mrs. Robinson. Her lawyer put in some evidence showing that she bore a good character. The prosecution could not prove intent to defraud, so the case went to the jury with this fundamental weakness, the law of California requiring the proof of intent to defraud."

The jurors agreed in giving the defendant the benefit of the doubt.

FROM London, England, on July 15, came the report that the Blackburn Chamber of Commerce, representing an area in which there are 250,000 looms and nearly 4,000,000 spindles, had on the previous evening petitioned the Board of Trade respecting the clause in the new American tariff bill prohibiting the importation of goods manufactured wholly or partly by children under fourteen years of age. The chamber pointed out that if the proposal were adopted it would mean, under present conditions, an absolute prohibition of entry into America of Lancashire's textile commodities. The following days brought equally vigorous unofficial protests from Germany. The manufacturers there do not hesitate to state their grievances against the proposed American legislation. The German labor laws set the working age for children at thirteen years, and to differentiate in the handling of goods from factories employing children ranging from thirteen years of age upward would be a physical impossibility.

Europeans Fear the Child Labor Tariff

Both countries claim that the United States Government is trying to force upon them a standard of humanitarianism far above that of its own people. They call attention to the lack of uniform child labor laws in this country and the lax enforcement of those which do raise the working age to fourteen years or over.

AMONG the most important international events in the world's news at the middle of July were those centering round the new government of China. On July 15 came the report of an abrupt change in Russia's policy toward China. Russia has denounced the recent treaty on the status of Mongolia, and has assumed an attitude more determined than ever. In the opinion of those familiar with the situation, this means the complete loss of Mongolia to China, and in reality the acquisition of Outer Mongolia by Russia. While it is generally recognized that China is being imposed upon, it is not considered likely that any Power will step in to help China. None of the European nations is in a position to do so.

War and Foreign Aggression Menace China's Republic

That China's troubles are far from being all on the outside is indicated by press dispatches from Washington, D. C. Reports that reached the Department of State on July 16 indicated that the long-threatened revolution against President Yuan Shi Kai had been begun under the able generalship of General Hwang Hsing, who took a leading part in the successful revolt against the Manchus. The present revolt has been brewing for many months and it constitutes a struggle between the North and the South of China. Yuan Shi Kai is at last put in a position to prove that he controls the country, and it is confidently expected that the next few weeks will demonstrate whether he is the all-powerful dictator.

Something more than the future of the Republic of China is involved in the trouble now beginning. It will be a struggle which may result in a partition of the nation between the North and South, in which event the chances are, in the opinion of observers there, that the ultimate result will be a forward movement on the part of aggressive Powers, which may mean in the end the partition of China herself.

A Peking despatch said: "The provinces of Kiangsi, Kiangsu, Kwangsi, Fokien, Szechuen, Hunan, Anhui, and Kwangtung are preparing to declare their independence and to form a Southern Chinese confederacy, according to apparently authoritative statements current here. Fighting continues in the Province of Kiangsi, and northern troops are proceeding there."

FROM the great number of contradictory reports sent from the various sources of information in the Near East, a few facts seem plain. Success has attended the military efforts of both Servia and Greece. Turkey has again entered the field and is rapidly advancing a strong force into the territory which she recently lost to Bulgaria. Roumania has opened hostilities and despatched a well-equipped division of her army into Bulgarian territory from the northeast, occupying the quadrangle outlined by Rustchuk, Turtukai, Dobrieh and Varna. The general tenor of the despatches indicates that Bulgaria is not meeting such success as in the campaign against Turkey. Even the Sofia despatches admit the invasion of the Servians, Turks and Roumanians. The latter have cut the railway over which Sofia receives its supplies and added the possibility of starving both Bulgaria's capital and army to the tenseness of the situation.

Balkan War and Politics Nearing a Crisis

Politically, Bulgaria is greatly upset. Dr. Daneff, the premier, who carried through the plans for the Turkish campaign and so ably represented his country at the ambassadorial conferences in London, has resigned with his cabinet and M. Malinoff, the Democratic leader, who was premier in 1908, has been called upon to form a government. The best verified reports up to the date of the preparation of this issue for the press tell of the continued advance of the Greek troops into the portion of Macedonia that has been hold by Bulgaria since the termination of the Turkish campaign. The despatches on July 18 indicated that Bulgaria had realized the desperateness of her situation and was making efforts to secure peace. Direct from Sofia came the statement that King Ferdinand had telegraphed to King Charles of Roumania that Bulgaria was ready to negotiate terms of settlement with Roumania.

From Salonica, telegraphed by King Constantine's special order, in reply to a request from the New York Times, came a horrible account of outrages said to have been committed by the Bulgarians. In this account the following sentences appear:

As the Greek army advances crimes of unthinkable cruelty are discovered. The Bulgarian authorities have silenced the voices of thousands of innocents who perished under horrors such as human history has never before recorded. There is not a village which has been occupied by the Bulgarians that has not had its men, women, and children massacred, its young women outraged, its houses robbed and burned. Ordinary massacres no longer satisfy the Bulgarians, and they have invented refinements of cruelty which the imagination refuses to comprehend. Girls are outraged before their parents, wives before their husbands, young men and old men are mutilated. Before the work is done their limbs are broken, their eyes are torn from the sockets. They disembowel one, burn another, cut off the noses and ears of others. At first it seemed that these crimes had been committed by camp followers, but investigation has unmistakably shown that all was done by regular soldiers under the orders of their chiefs. A Bulgarian captain, Dimitri Botsanoff Anguet, was seen presiding at the massacres at Demir-Hissar. Elsewhere there were officers of the Twenty-first and Twenty-second Regiments.

King Ferdinand of Bulgaria denies emphatically the stories of atrocities committed by Bulgarian troops. He cabled the following message through the Bulgarian Royal Private Secretariat:

All the rumors about Bulgarian atrocities are infamous Greek calumnies destined to poison universal public opinion, and in regard to which the truth will be established one of these days.

THE hope that the threatened railroad strike in which nearly one hundred thousand conductors and trainmen of more than forty Eastern railroads were involved might be averted by the conference of the representatives of both sides in the controversy with President Wilson and the prompt passing of the Newlands Bill by Congress was seriously shaken by renewed threats on the part of the railroad men. They objected to the proposition of the railroads to air grievances of their own before the commission. The demands of the trainmen for higher wages would, the railway managers declared, be met by demands on their part, including the abolishment of all monthly guarantees; the reduction in the pay of all brakemen on passenger and freight trains, where under extra-train laws, additional men have been required; the abolishing of all double compensation, and other items. The Newlands Bill provides for the appointment of a commission consisting of three members, the chief of whom is to receive a salary of $7,500 and hold office for seven years. All controversies affecting railways, if they cannot be settled without outside pressure or advice, are to be submitted to this commission. The headquarters of the dissatisfied trainmen has been at the Broadway Central Hotel, New York, where a committee of one hundred discussed the events of the controversy and laid their plans for future action.

Difficulties in Averting the Railway Strike

There was widespread apprehension as the realization grew of the seriousness of the situation. Such a strike as that which was threatened would paralyze business and endanger the supply not only of the comforts but the necessities of life. The leaders of the negotiations on both sides have been Mr. H. B. Garretson, president of the Order of Railway Conductors; Mr. W. G. Lee, president of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen; and Mr. Elisha Lee, chairman of the Conference Committee of Railroad Managers.

'OR AN EVANGELISTIC FEDERATION

MORE LETTERS REPLYING TO THE GREAT QUESTION: "IS EVANGELISM DYING OUT?" AND DISCUSSING THE NEW ORGANIZATION FOR A HIGHER STANDARD AND ACCEPTABLE METHODS

Why Not "Specialists" in the Lord's Work?

AM in sympathy with the federation proposition, and give it my heartiest endorsement. I know from experience and observation that evangelism is not dying out, but is becoming re and more intensified, and where the work is llowed up by the churches as it ought to be, it is ng every church and community good. As we ve specialists in every line of work, why not in Lord's work as well? E. B. WESTHAFER.

Heartily Approves the Federation Plan

THINK Dr. Biederwolf's suggestion of an "Evangelistic National Federation" a splendid e. It would stimulate the best men, and would ed out many who are going under the disguise of e evangelist, but whose methods have brought e work into disrepute.

Personally, I don't believe evangelism is dying t. I have never had as many calls as at the pres- t time, and have never had greater success.
Wilmore, Ky. J. B. KENDALL.

"We Must Get Back to Pentecost"

AM sure that evangelism is not dying out. I do not believe there ever was a time when people ere more ready and willing to receive the Gospel an now. Many churches are depending too uch on worldly methods and man-made schemes, nd on social activities, instead of depending on ne Gospel and prayer and the power of the Holy pirit.

To bring about such conditions I suggest that e get back to Pentecost in prayer, in unity, in be- ng filled with the Spirit, and in the matter of the essage itself. When we do get back to Pentecost n these particulars, we shall get back to Pentecostal esults. S. D. GOODALE.
Webster Grove, Mo.

Evangelists Should "Get Together"

SCRIPTURAL evangelism is not dying out, nor can it so long as present conditions prevail. So ong as sin exists, the remedy for sin must be car- ied to the sin-stricken. God has called some to be evangelists as truly as he has called others to be eachers and pastors, and the "woe" is upon such if hey do not answer the call, regardless of the fact hat others may be trying to evangelize who have never been called. God will care for his own, and his Word will not return void.

The suggestion: "Why not an evangelistic federation?" appeals to me. This federated movement (Young Men's Christian Association) has girdled the globe, and now we have representatives from all the leading nations and races. I am a firm believer in the "get-together" plan.
Greensboro, N. C. TILMAN HOBSON.

Infidelity and Love of Pleasure the Church's Foes

I HAVE been an evangelist, working in the churches for many years, having worked with Moody and Sankey in some of their great evangelistic campaigns. It is a sad but very real fact that evangelism is dying out. And why? First, because in many pulpits infidelity has come in and the great foundation truths of the Bible are not preached. And secondly, in many churches most of the members have become lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God.

Evangelism is not dying out in the churches where Jesus Christ is honored and obeyed, but on the contrary where higher criticism and worldliness have come into the church there is no place for the New Testament evangelist. New Testament evangelism can only be realized where the leadership of the Holy Ghost is followed.
Bridgeport, Conn. JAMES SCOVILL.

Un-Biblical and Mercenary Evangelism an Evil

I DO not think the old-time spiritual tone of the true evangelism is dying out. I believe, however, that there are evangelists in the field to-day whose preaching is not Biblical. There is too much of the story-telling, deathbed scenes, hairbreadth escapes, etc. The note should be "Saved for Service," not just merely to get into heaven—in other words, enlisting soldiers for Jesus Christ. To do this, there should be more Bible illustration and Bible exposition.

I do believe that a tactful and consecrated evangelist can arouse and bring to the front for the Master's service church members that have become indifferent, which the regular pastor cannot do, owing to their environment. After more than thirty years' experience, I find that the kind of Bible preaching which D. L. Moody, C. H. Spurgeon and others employed is the most effective and brings spiritual results which are lasting.

I regret that there are men whose minds are so much set on the remuneration part. I am eternally opposed to that kind of business. I believe that every man should receive remuneration according to his ability to revive the church and benefit the community, rather than according to the number of professed conversions.

I am very strongly in favor of such a federation as Dr. Biederwolf suggests, and believe if it should be accomplished that it would clear away a great deal of the uncertainty and suspicion that seem to cloud the minds of the pastors and their members at the present time. E. H. BAKER.

Some Causes of Church Weakness

I HAVE always been in favor of a federation of the worthy, sane, God-called, Spirit-filled evangelists. While a few are willing to go into such a federation, the rank and file would not, for fear lest they would be cut out of the work altogether. They are in the same class with at least 40 per cent. of the pastors of to-day. The churches and boards of the different denominations are not careful enough in securing men qualified to fill the position of pastor. So the churches are dying under such ministry. Then they send for an inexperienced evangelist, and they try to resurrect the dead church and put it where it belongs, but their work amounts to little or nothing.

I am an old-time Baptist, but I can work with any man who is a Bible Christian. I am in favor of union effort at all times; the best results come from that kind of a meeting. I am conference evangelist for Eastern Washington and Northern Idaho, working under the direction of our home missionary board, but insist in having all meetings union so far as I can. J. DIMMICK TAYLOR.

The Pastor Does the Preparatory Work

FOR thirteen years I have been doing the work of an evangelist. I have had a part in most of the simultaneous campaigns under Dr. Chapman, with Gipsy Smith, etc. Out of the varied experiences of these years, I can answer your question, "Is evangelism dying out?" by saying "No!" People are thinking as never before of their obligations to God and their need of Jesus Christ. In these revivals where the results have been largest it has been due in a large measure to the faithful preparatory work of the pastor. We evangelists give too little credit in that direction; they sow, we reap. To be sure, many of us have had experiences which have given us a knowledge of men that many pastors do not possess. To us that knowledge is a power, and we realize that we can enter into the fellowship of their temptations and failures as many a minister is unable to do.
Winthrop, Mass. LEWIS E. SMITH.

Would Raise the Standard of Evangelism

IT IS no doubt more difficult to move people to-day than ever before, and more difficult to conserve the results. This is due to a subtle unbelief in and out of the church, and to a pleasure-loving, money-loving age. But the Gospel is still the power of God unto salvation.

I do not interpret the protest in certain circles as against evangelism but as against cheap sensationalism. It is not just to brand evangelism as cheap because of some who have been sensational in message and method. Some pastors whom I know are quite as sensational in their methods as any evangelist ever dared to be. Is the pastoral office therefore dying out?

I certainly favor any federation or plan which can be amicably worked out to raise the standard, serve the cause and protect the church.
Honey Creek, Wis. J. BASCOM MCMINN.

The Church Must Either Evangelize or Fossilize

THERE never was a day when there were more evangelists on the field and more evangelistic work being done than now. It is only coming into its own and being recognized as essential to the life of the church and fulfilling the purpose of the church's existence in the world. A church must either evangelize or fossilize. She must be a missionary church or a missing church. She must preach or perish.

While every minister has the evangelistic gift, that is, if he has been called and commissioned by the Lord, he feels that he cannot do the work of the evangelist as successfully or effectively as the man who is at it all the days of the year, and therefore there is a greater demand for the evangelist by the ministers than ever before. Too long there has been a great gulf fixed between the minister and the evangelist, but, thank God, that is being bridged. There were faults on both sides, no doubt, usually caused by misunderstanding or misrepresentation. Rev. Walker, in one of his books of sermons, gives a parable somewhat like this: An evangelist went to a town to hold meetings, and he was told about the old minister who had labored there for some thirty or more years, and being asked what he thought of him, he (the evangelist) said: "Oh, he is stagnation." They went to the old minister and asked him what he thought of the evangelist; he said, "Oh, he is sensation." That is how it has been too long, but I think that day has gone and the pastor and the evangelist are coming closer together than ever. The spiritual tide and tone is higher than before it came, and I often feel that if the results were not only conserved, but furthered, the tide would rise higher and higher. Let us have done with the carping criticism of the work of evangelism, and let us get at the work of winning men for Christ.

I have never met an evangelist who would not gladly give up his ways of doing the work if he could get better. We are all disgusted with our methods, but they are the best we have, and they are doing the business and getting men converted. If the opponents or the critics will give us better methods, we are only too willing to drop ours and take theirs. You generally find that they have none of their own, and usually never have tried to win men for Christ. I have heard that the mule in the team that kicks has ceased to pull. Don't let us be hangers on, but let us help all we can.

Evangelism is the only hope for the world, and the church in the world. Too long she has been "holding the fort." The day has come when she must get on the aggressive. There are those for whom Christ died who are on the outside and under the power of the devil, and she is feeling that she must win them. The methods will be of little or no account to us as long as we succeed in winning souls. WM. P. NICHOLSON.
Annville, Pa.

Southern Evangelists Favor Federation

THE brand of evangelism which the Master instructed his disciples to use is not dying out, and never will. Sensational methods are coming under the ban of all our really spiritual pastors. There is a demand for, and God and his church need, Spirit-filled men, who have a passion for souls, and who are in the work by reason of the call of God and not the call of gold.

With reference to the federation of which Mr. Biederwolf speaks, I should be heartily in sympathy with such a movement, and I and my entire party would be willing to be enrolled. We have here at Siloam Springs quite a little colony of evangelists, and recently we set on foot a similar movement intended to cover the Southwest, and, in fact, as wide a territory as possible, but this should in no way conflict with the other organization.
Siloam Springs, Ark. JNO. B. ANDREWS.

A Woman Evangelist's View of the Case

IS EVANGELISM dying out? I reply, judging from the Chicago Moody School and its work, I should say "No!" Does evangelism pay? Yes, always, provided after the worker has done his work and is gone, the church, headed by its pastor, follows up the work and nurses the "babes in Christ." If the lost chord has ceased to vibrate, it is because the worldliness of professed followers of Christ has grieved the Holy Spirit. The Bible was never perhaps more read than to-day. But, alas, it is not lived!

The evangelist is able to do, and desires to do, much that it would not be wise for the minister to undertake.

Educated men and women are needed, but the consecrated and sanctified are much more needful. I should insist on a federation sending out a baptized company, and have them a paid company. It is humiliating, after one has poured out his soul for God, the church, and humanity, to sit and listen to the begging, and if you are a lady, you may perhaps get your car fare.

My soul cries out to God to bless the evangelists. No two work alike, but all work in the fear of God.
Catskill, N. Y. MRS. M. N. VAN COTT.

A Labor Court at Last

IN THE establishment of a labor court, to be known as the "National Board of Mediation and Conciliation," our government has taken a great step forward. For several years THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has advocated the creation of labor courts as a means of settling industrial disputes and averting strikes. Even as late as our issue of July 2, we urged the point in these words:

> If an industrial dispute were submitted to a Labor Court at the outset and the case either heard at once or testimony taken by a commission on which both sides are equally represented—strikes being held in abeyance meanwhile—a fair basis would be laid, in a majority of cases, for a peaceful adjustment.

Now, as though the idea had taken hold of President, Congress, railroad managers and workers, like an inspiration, we have the thing itself accomplished—the dream realized! The Labor Court has come! The great experiment, which has been under satisfactory trial in Australia and Canada, has begun in our own land under the best auspices possible.

On July 14 the representatives of the leading Eastern railroads and of nearly one hundred thousand trainmen and conductors met in conference with the President, a number of Congressmen and government officials in the White House. The result was a practical agreement looking to the creation of an independent department to be known as the Board of Mediation and Conciliation. Within twenty-four hours the Newlands Bill was passed in both houses of Congress and signed by the President. It authorizes him to appoint a commission of three members, the leading member (or president) for seven years, with a salary of $7,500. All controversies affecting the railroads that cannot be settled by mutual negotiation are to be referred to the new Labor Court, which also has the privilege of offering its services. It is a purely advisory body. It has the right, should its own efforts at mediation prove futile, to urge the contending parties to submit their case to arbitration by a board of three or six members, as they prefer. Agreements to arbitrate are to be in writing and must state that any award by a majority of the arbitrators shall be accepted as binding. Awards may be executed by the Federal Courts, with which appeals may be filed.

In the railroad troubles, both sides have grievances to be arbitrated. Our government's attitude is not one of coercion. Favoring neither, it will strive to conciliate both and to secure exact justice. The railroads are an indispensable public utility, and we venture to hope that the day of "tie-ups" at the will of either managers or employees is passing away. Every labor strike is industrial war, involving needless suffering and financial loss, and the Labor Court is the only available and logical remedy.

The Mexican Tangle

ON JULY 16 President Wilson summoned Ambassador Henry Lane Wilson to proceed at once from Mexico to Washington on one of the battleships then at Vera Cruz. Startling rumors and conjectures were afloat. It was reported that the diplomatic representatives at Mexico City had sent notes to their governments, advising them to urge the United States to recognize the Huerta régime. It was further reported that one, if not two, European Powers had acted upon this advice.

President Wilson has been urged from many quarters to take the step of recognizing Huerta, but has persevered in his policy of withholding that recognition. The administration evidently believes that Huerta came to his present position through intrigue and murder, and that he is not the authorized head of the Mexican Republic. A large portion of the republic is in revolt against him, and it cannot be said that he is the actual ruler of the nation. On the other hand, the opponents of President Wilson, in this country, in Mexico, and abroad, hold that his delay in recognizing Huerta has encouraged the rebellion against him, which has assumed alarming proportions and greatly endangered the life and property of foreign residents in Mexico.

The anti-American feeling there has been very strong. There has been great resentment over the refusal of the United States to recognize the new government, as Great Britain, Japan, Brazil and China have already done. It was feared that the departure of our ambassador might lead to a serious outbreak. While hoping that intervention would not be necessary, our government has been well prepared to strike in case of necessity. Four battleships were kept at Mexican shores, and 25,000 troops are either directly on the border or within short marching distance.

The old principle of the Monroe doctrine has come to the fore again. It is a new thing to have European governments advising the United States as to affairs on the North American continent. But it is not surprising that the other Powers should regret the delay of our government to recognize Huerta, since it necessarily delays their own action, and thus prevents them from properly looking after their own interests in Mexico. At the same time they think they have reason to believe that our delay is prolonging the serious disorder throughout the republic. The time for the official Mexican election is in October, and it is thought that President Wilson wished to postpone action until this election has been held. Altogether, the tangle is undeniably serious, and the administration must combine patience with promptness.

Dreamers and Doers

IT IS fortunate for the world's progress that the mind of man is largely practical. We transform our hopes and desires into actualities. This is the spirit that energized the second World's Christian Citizenship Conference in session in Portland, Oregon, lately, which has been striving to reach practical methods of solving some of the greatest problems of our day: the relations of capital and labor, marriage and divorce, peace and war, crime and morality, the social conscience, individual character, family life, intemperance, missions, evangelism, public education, pure food, prison reform, and other topics. On all of these subjects and many more, the great audiences had the benefit of expert knowledge by men who spoke with authority, and whose addresses were of a character to arouse and enlighten the public mind. The whole conference formed a brilliant intellectual yet practical symposium of the foremost thinkers of some fifteen different countries besides our own. Plans of action were outlined, to be communicated to religious and social organizations, and to all agencies that can be enlisted in the movement for deeper national, State, civic and individual righteousness—that righteousness which exalts a nation and recognizes Christianity as the uplifting influence which the world so sorely needs. When the full confe ence report is issued, it will be a volume wor possessing.

Mr. Bryan's Lectures

THERE has been a good deal of comment in t newspapers lately—some of it good-natured a more of it acerb—concerning the course of the Se retary of State in continuing his lecture engag ments while holding his very important cabinet office. It has been argued that, were his example be taken as a precedent, the other members of t Cabinet might easily find excuses for devoti their time and energies to other remunerative e terprises, instead of giving undivided attention public business as the people have a right to expe

Mr. Bryan is a lecturer of long experience ar wide popularity. It is commonly reported that l receives sometimes as high as $1,000 a night for h platform work. He has his engagements booke far ahead, and this was probably the case with h Chautauqua course when he accepted the secretar ship. He is not at all averse to criticism, an points out that he is simply utilizing his vacati in his own way and that the public business is n permitted to suffer meanwhile. And it is at th point that the public seems to differ with Mr. Brya

There is another part of his explanation which not altogether lucid or convincing. He frankl states that he has been saving an average of $10 000 a year from his lecture income, and to sacrific this during four years of cabinet service would re present a loss to his savings account of $40,00 Moreover, he considers the salary of $12,000 a tached to his office quite inadequate, and he seek a means of supplementing it through lecturing i vacation, at the same time avoiding encroachme upon his provision for old age.

To many this will seem a somewhat mercena view of the case. Our people think well of Mr Bryan. They have regarded him as a citizen o public spirit and high ability—one who would no hesitate at any proper sacrifice in the service o his country. He is believed to be a comparativel wealthy man. Other secretaries of state, some o them by no means rich men, have contrived to mak their official salary square with their expenses. I they did this as a patriotic duty, even with the aid o "plain living and high thinking," they set a worth example. Mr. Bryan does not seem to have counte the cost before accepting office; but now that th matter has been fully discussed, we believe he wi recognize the value of distinguished precedent Cabinet traditions are too well established to b lightly disregarded.

Looking Forward

OUR Chattanooga reader, whose letter we printe a few weeks ago, has evidently awakened deep and general interest in the question dis cussed in his "little circle of friends," relative to the preparation of the world for the Lord's coming. Is it preparing for an event of such transcendent importance that it overshadows al others? Is the great body of Christians in the attitude of earnest expectation? And, if He were to return, even for a brief sojourn, would he find the world better or worse? Many letters have been received in response to our Southern friend's suggestion, and these we shall print in our next issue, believing that their publication may induce others to apply to their own hearts and lives the great personal question involved. There is a tendency, even on the part of many very good Christian people, to regard the Lord's coming as an event still very remote, or improbable. Its actuality has no recognition in their daily lives. They pray, "Thy kingdom come," but it is to many a meaningless phrase. That which was the dearest and most precious hope of the early church has faded, so that it is now to many but a dim tradition, if not wholly obscured. We need, more and more, to realize the fact of this great truth, to study it in the light of the revealed Word, and to make it a part of our own lives.

THE PROPOSED PERRY MEMORIAL AT PUT-IN-BAY, OHIO

Wife Burned Up $700

NETT GILFORD, a fruit dealer of Brook- read about the suspension of the Pittsburg recently, and it made him suspicious of all stitutions. So he drew $800 out of the sav- nk, and hid it in the kitchen range, which t had a fire in it for several weeks. He did anything to his wife about what he had nd she started a fire in the range, and he ed to come into the house just as the flames laring up. He shouted in terror. Water rown upon the flames, but when the fire was extinguished, only $100 out of the crumpled greenbacks were left; the other $700 were ashes. There is nothing absolutely safe in this world. The savings bank in this country is wonderfully reliable, and is a great blessing to the man of small income who desires to save. The Brooklyn man was more fortunate than scores of persons who, after having worked hard and deposited their money in the savings bank, have then drawn it out to invest it in some get-rich-quick scheme, and have not saved even $100 out of the $800 put in the fire. We have in this incident the insecurity of earthly treasure and the necessity of our depositing our money in the hovels of poverty and in the treasury of the church in obedience to the command of Christ:

Lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through nor steal. (Matt. 6: 20.)

France Encourages Large Families

TROUBLED at the decline of the birth rate in France, the national government is planning a fund for the support and encouragement of large families. The bill setting apart $10,000,000 a year for the purpose, amended in the French Senate, passed the Chamber of Deputies July 11. Next year, when the act comes into operation, needy French parents with more than three children below the age of thirteen, may receive from a municipal authority an annual grant of $12 to $18 for each child beyond that number. In the case of a widower, the grant will apply to children less than thirteen years of age beyond the number of two. A widow may get a grant for any children below that age except one. The fund will be supplied by the State, the departments and the municipalities. The French nation is one of the thriftiest in the world, and yet the lack of children has been and is now a serious menace against which wise action is now being taken by the government. The Psalmist gives this description of the ideal home, the unit of the state:

Thy children shall be like olive plants round about thy table. (Ps. 128: 3.)

Potato Educates Boys

A FARMER owning a small place in Colorado was very anxious to give school advantages to his two sons. He took this plan to get the money necessary: He prepared carefully two acres of ground and planted them with the best seed potatoes. He had an excellent crop and got between $500 and $600 for it. This enabled him last year to send one of his boys to the Montrose High School and the other to the Colorado State Agricultural College. The farmer is one who makes two blades of grass grow where one existed. His work is the basis of all other industries. He is wise to plan the use of a portion of the proceeds of the crop for the education of his children. Agriculture, which is the basal, was the primitive industry of the race.

And the Lord God took the man, and put him into the Garden of Eden to dress it and to keep it. (Gen. 2: 15.)

Immigrant Girl Model Scholar

HAVING completed an eight years' course of study in half that time, Katie Newman, fourteen years old, was graduated from one of the public schools of New York City the other day as one of the prize pupils of her class. Four years ago she came to this country from Austria with no knowledge of our language. She mastered the language and by a miraculous energy she crowded eight years of school curriculum into four. Besides, she learned to sew and made the dress in which she was graduated. There was an understanding among a number of the girls graduating that they would practice the greatest economy in their graduating gowns, so that the poorest in the class might not be embarassed by the costly wardrobe of the children of the rich. The cost of Miss Newman's dress was $1.17. When we see men coming to our shores unfriendly to our free form of government, plotting against the home, the church and the state, we see danger in such immigration; but when we see a little Austrian immigrant girl of humble parentage take such a deep interest in mastering our language, in cultivating her mind, and in exercising the sweet spirit of unselfishness and of humility, we rejoice in our land of opportunity, which opens its arms wide to receive those who would love our country and maintain our Christian institutions. This industrious student, this loved daughter fitting into our national life, answers the Psalmist's description of the ideal daughter:

And our daughters as cornerstones hewn after the fashion of a palace. (Ps. 144: 12, R.V.)

Life-Preserver Defective

ARTHUR P. CADZOW, sixteen years old, went out into Jamaica Bay, off Seaside, the other day to learn how to swim. His brother was teaching him. A life-preserver supposed to be perfectly reliable was fastened to Arthur, and he was told to leap from the boat into the water, and then he would receive instructions as to the use of the arms and legs in the stroke. He jumped into the water, and to the horror of his brother he did not come up, and there was considerable searching before the body was recovered. Hundreds of men, women and children would have been saved when the General Slocum burned if the life-preservers had not been filled with sawdust instead of cork. The trusting of the body on a life-preserver which does not preserve is death, and so is the trusting of the soul to a system of salvation that will not save. Amidst all the currents of time and tides of eternity, simple faith in Christ is the preserver of the soul.

For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life. (John 3: 16.)

SAVED BY BLOOD*

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON BY DR. AND MRS. WILBUR F. CRAFTS

IT WAS the dawn of freedom for the Israelites who had been more than four hundred years slaves in Egypt. The freedom began with the feast of the Passover. God himself ordained it, and instructed Moses to tell the people how it should be prepared and eaten. The meal was to consist of roast lamb, bitter herbs, and unleavened bread. It was to be eaten at sundown "between the evenings," when the fourteenth day of Nisan (April) was closing and the fifteenth day beginning. Each family was to be gathered around its board and eat standing, prepared for journeying, their shoes on their feet, which they were not accustomed to wear in the house, their walking-sticks in their hands, their loose garments gathered up in their girdles, so that they might walk unimpeded. But the most important part of the Passover was the decoration of the houses, all to be decorated alike, and all on the outside. It was told Moses by God himself that the Israelites should take bunches of hyssop, and dash upon the doorposts and the lintels of the entrance of their houses some of the blood of the lambs they had slain for roasting.

"What a gruesome sight!" Not so, if we will consider the result. There was to be one more demonstration by the true God against the idol gods, against Isis, the great mother god. God had told Moses that he would send the death angel into every house in Egypt where there was no blood upon the doors, and the oldest child in every house should die.

When the Israelites had eaten the Passover supper, they stood waiting for the summons to start on their journey. While they waited, they heard the loud cries of the Egyptian fathers and mothers, because the death angel had come into their houses; in every house the oldest child lay dead—even in the palace of Pharaoh. The idol mother god could give them no help, and at last Pharaoh saw that the God of the Israelites had conquered, and he quickly sent for Moses and Aaron, saying, "I will let the people go." The Egyptians were so glad when they saw the Israelites begin their march that they gave them gold and silver and jewels and clothing.

There was blood on the cross of Jesus, his own blood as the Lamb of God. The death angel did not pass over him, but stopped there until he died. The blood on the cross was not to save Jesus, but to save us, for God so loved the world that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." (John 3: 16.) The Passover supper, as the Israelites ate it in Egypt, was eaten by Jesus with his apostles on the night before he died, and then he gave a new kind of Passover supper, in which all who love him are expected to have a share—the Lord's Supper, in which the bread is the symbol of the body of Jesus, and the wine is the symbol of his blood. Jesus said, as he passed the bread, "Take, eat, this is my body, which is broken for you." And as he passed the wine he said: "This is my blood which is shed for the remission of sins. Drink ye all of it." By doing this, we put the blood of Jesus on ourselves, and we need have no fear of the death angel. That does not mean that these bodies of ours are never going to die, but it does mean that we are to live in heaven forever. The death angel never enters there! This makes clear the Golden Text: "The Son of Man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many." (Matt. 20: 28.) Put another verse beside it: "Christ our Passover is sacrificed for us." (I. Cor. 5: 7.) The blood on the doors secured Israel's peace. They had no fear of the death angel, for God had said the blood on the doors would make them safe. Let us trust the blood of Jesus, and we shall have peace in our hearts.

Both the Passover supper in Egypt and the Lord's Supper in that upper room in Jerusalem are golden links in the chain of covenants between God and man—whose history is the history of redemption—the covenants of God with Adam, Noah, Abraham, which, with those of the Passover and of Sinai, make up the "Old Covenant." A new and better covenant was pictured in advance by the Passover, which, on the Egyptian side, was a symbol of God's justice and wrath, but on the Hebrew side, a symbol of God's love and mercy. "The children of Israel had light in their dwellings," but their escape from the plagues was not because they were faultless. The twentieth chapter of Ezekiel tells us that they had been greatly corrupted by the idolatries and vices of their masters. It was not their goodness but God's grace that saved them in unmerited mercy. Not on the score of "worthiness" were men admitted to the Lord's table on that first night, but through obedient faith.

Possibly there were such murmurings in some of those Hebrew cabins as: "I have my doubts as to whether God really authorized Moses to scare us with the story of the death angel. But as there is nothing else for me to do, I will sprinkle the blood upon my door. It can do me no harm." In our day, we call such persons "half-hearted Christians." They are saved on a very narrow margin, and the fault is all their own. Let them learn to trust fully in the atoning blood of Christ. In one of the great rock galleries of Gibraltar, two British soldiers had mounted guard, one at each end of the vast tunnel. SEARCH OF VACATION LAND

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER, JR.

URRYING throng of girls dashed past , suit cases banging together, tennis kets slipping from overcrowded hands, ghter darting from eyes and lips. And rowded up the steps of the train that n short, nervous snorts, as if anxious to be away, the last girl turned with her hand on the door knob, and looked back through the station, which was filled to overflowing with struggling, pushing humanity in search of Vacation Land. And as she looked, I heard her sigh ever so softly, and say to her friends:

E. Sangster, Jr.

"How nice it is to be going away! I hate the city—the horrid city!"

And I knew at the sight of her face that it was time to go away. For re lines, faintly drawn, nervous lines, young mouth; and the great dark eyes nly the tired-looking, discouraged travel- ailed to see the romance of the place. For romance everywhere if one looks for it, crowded railway station.

own and watched the people file by—people race and class. And as I watched, an eling seemed to come over me; a feeling as all alone in an enormous amphitheater the most thrilling scene from the drama

y came down the platform to the ticket- lowed by three boys with tan-colored, close- heads. The eldest was clothed in an new suit, while his smaller brothers wore lothes. They were victims of the tragedy of maller." Each chubby hand grasped a ba- d each mouth was opened in a wide grin. her was talking to the ticket agent.

"He's only six," she announced, pointing to the second boy. "Yes, I know he looks older, but he ain't, are you, honey? There, child, don't answer with your mouth full. 'Tain't manners." But the agent, with a bored air, was motioning her away.

A colored porter came by with a wheel chair, which he was pushing gently, almost reverently, before him. In it a little lady was seated complacently, soft lips smiling, eyes alive with excitement, silver curls quivering around a small Dresden china face.

A whisper sounded beside me and I recognized the voice that a moment before had been arguing at the ticket window. The mother was talking to her eldest son.

"How happy she looks," came the whisper, "and how sweet! Jus' for all the world like a queen or —somebody's grandmother."

And I smiled through a rather misty feeling about the eyes. For I had just noticed that the dainty, patrician little hand grasped a pair of crutches.

Two college boys came rushing in and dashed up to a train that was just pulling out. A banjo case was slung from the shoulder of one of them, and the other dragged a sullen-looking bulldog by a chain that seemed just about ready to break. Hot and crimson-faced, they sprinted down the platform and crawled up the steps of the last car, where they sank exhausted among a pile of bags and magazines and howling puppy. And they were still sitting there, gasping wildly, as the train with accelerated speed dashed out of sight around a curve.

Then I heard shrill voices and excited laughter from the farthest door of the depot, and glancing around, I saw a throng of children, perhaps fifty of them. They were poor looking children, with hats awry, paper bundles half open, and shoes torn, but they looked happy, for they were going to the country. My glance went upward to the smiling, rather anxious face of the lady in charge and then I recognized her. She was one of the Mont-Lawn teachers.

"We're hurrying for the train," she explained, "ever so fast, but at best it seems to be mighty slow work. Mary's shoe is always coming untied, little Jerry has lost his hat three times, and William had to get a drink of water or, he declared, he would simply choke to death! And she nodded good-by to me, and marshaled her small charges into some semblance of order.

It was now almost time for my own train to start, so I reluctantly gathered my things together and clambered aboard the fast-crowding car. There was some one in every seat, and so, after a minute of hesitation, I sat down beside a girl who was looking out of the window. Her pale face was tired-looking, and seemed very childish against the dark of her softly-coiled hair. She glanced at me perfunctorily, and when I smiled, her lips curved in a delicious little Cupid's bow. Then she glanced out of the window again, but as the train started she turned to me with a veritable rush of words.

"Do you know," she murmured joyously, "that I'm going on my vacation, and that it's two whole weeks in the country—at home I haven't seen them since Christmas, and now the blueberries are ripe so we can have pies—mother's pies. And when I go to bed at night it won't be in a white iron, hired bed. It'll be in great-grandfather's four-poster that he made himself, and mother'll tuck me in! Mother . . . " Her eyes grew dreamy for a moment, and then her whole face lit up with a wonderful smile, while her tiny hand rested for a moment on my sleeve. "Oh!" she cried, "I'm so happy. It's vacation time, and I'm going home!"

Where are the fairies we used to know,
And the castles we built to stand,
That wavered and broke like a bubble thrown
By a careless, unskilful hand?
If we drop our care we may find them there,
In the sunny Vacation Land.

A GREAT BOOK AGAINST WAR

ANY books have been writ- ten of war, but no author till now has given to the world so frightful and t a picture of the horrors of dern scientific battlefield as n Lamszus has in The Human ter-House, a volume lately is- Germany. In three months copies were sold. To counteract the influ- his book, a volume, the author- f which was attributed to a r of the royal family, was hur- issued, in which the romance ory of war were described and d with lavish effort. But the f The Human Slaughter-House n in rising ratio. The Univer- ce Congress in Geneva officially d the volume the most distin- l word-picture of war ever American edition has been is- the Frederick A. Stokes Com- f New York, and the book is ing widely read here. It is not that will be enjoyed by emo- or nervous people, and those of ass who begin it do so at the being painfully shocked, for mszus, in The Human Slaugh- se, has spread before us a pic- war so cruelly faithful that its realism would make the st shudder. He calls these tableaux of horror "scenes from the war that is to come," and shows that instead of battle meaning the bravery, strength and skill of man pitted against man; instead of the picturesque deeds of daring that marked the warfare of a past day, we have now, in this age of military science, war as mechanical or automatic butchery on a colossal scale.

His story is the experience of a civilian who, at the declaration of war, goes with the mobilized forces to join the colors. A few days of preparatory drill, and they are sent to the front. The parting scene, where he bids his wife and child good-by, is described. Then the barrack-yard, the service kit, the march to the cars, led by the bands playing martial airs and amid lanes of wildly cheering crowds and weeping women and children. Then the journey through a farming country till suddenly, on detraining, they find themselves within the zone of battle, with mangled dead dotting the meadows. A hot morning march "in the eye of the sun and without a drop of water," brings the command, "Halt!" They are in green fields, some with crops in blossom. Ahead is a dark wood. It is the first introduction to actual war—

The heavy noise in the air is incessant. I can't see where they are firing, and I can't see what they are firing at. The air is heavy with iron thunder. It closes like a ring round my chest. I am distinctly conscious that my chest is reverberating like a tense sounding-board—

What on earth is that?

A sound like the cracking of whips from somewhere or other. . . . The sound is so sharp, so distant, so intermittent, as if it were coming from the rifle-range. . . .

Then—by my side a man falls down, falls on his rifle, and lies still, never stirs again . . . shot through the head, clean through the brain. . . . That's what the cracking of whips means; it's coming from over there, out of the wood.

What is that crawling along the ground behind our line? . . . There is one here, another over there—it looks so novel and so odd. They are crawling back out of the firing-line. And I see how one of them suddenly tries to rise, clutches his rifle with both hands, and hauls himself to his feet by his gun. And now he is spreading his arms out, tumbling over backwards, and flinging his hands away from him, far apart. . . . His hands are still flapping up and down on the grass. I am looking back as if fascinated, while my legs keep on advancing.

But suddenly something begins to set up a rattle over there in the wood and buzzes like huge alarum-clocks running down.

"Lie down."

They have masked machine-guns in the wood over there; they are opening fire on us. I feel how my heart is thumping against my ribs. A machine-gun is equivalent to a company, the Old Man once explained to us, after we had been shot down in heaps to the last man by the machine-guns in the autumn maneuvers.

Men keep on falling under the invisible fire from the unseen foe. Machine guns buzz.

"Down! Rapid fire!" The line is prone and again we are blazing desperately into the wood, and can catch no glimpse of our enemy. Never a single arm raised against us, never the eye of a single man to challenge us. The wood, the green wood, is murdering us from afar, before a single human face comes in view.

I can hear nothing except the uncanny buzz coming out of the wood. . . . I literally feel how the lead is splashing into our ranks, how men are breaking down to the right and left of me. . . . "Down! Rapid fire!" . . . I throw myself on my face, my rifle at the ready. . . . Why does the order fail to reach us? No shout comes from the subaltern, none from the non-coms. . . . the nearest man a good twenty paces away . . . and then one other . . . only we three. . . .

The first line is lying shot down in the stubble. . . . What's the next thing? The ground becomes alive behind us . . . and clattering, panting and shouting . . . and again the wood rumbles sullenly . . . there they are.

Look, it is advancing to meet us, that murderous wood. . . . "Up! At the double!" . . . Who can tell whether he has been hit or not? . . . Behind there, out of the undergrowth—that's where it came from . . . that's where the streak of bullets flashed . . . there between the white larch trunks the beam of lead leaped out to meet us . . . over there, behind that green wall, that's where Murder is sitting, and shooting our arms and legs away from our trunks. Slay her as she has slain us. Rend her to pieces, as she has rent us.

At last, after frightful sacrifice, the wood is carried, its hidden occupants driven off, and most of them have been killed—a few machine guns are captured, and the maddened victors soon beat them out of recognition with axes.

And now amid joyous cheers raise the thunderous shout of Victory. Let the pipes and the bugles ring out. This is Death on the stricken field! This is a soldier's frenzy and the joy of battle: to charge with bared breast against planted steel—to dash cheering with soft, uncased brain against a wall of steel. In such wholesale, callous, purposeful fashion vermin only are exterminated. We count for nothing more than vermin in this war.

Now the broken column crosses a meadow, beyond which is a swamp.

The swamp takes many lives, the shells from the hidden battery on the far side take still more. Men stick fast in the mud, are struck dead—others plunge forward, clawing and groping, face downward into the water.

At last the solid ground beyond is gained, and the soldiers, coming to their senses, "look at one another with dumb eyes—a great unspeakable horror that will never be allayed again has risen in those eyes."

Till now, they have seen merely glimpses of a fleeing foe. Now there is to be reprisal—dynamite. But we forbear to quote from the author's description of the whirling earth, the battle in the darkness, illuminated as by an inferno, the rain of stained and dismembered bodies that fell upon the victors, the horrible individual tragedies that drove men mad. These may be read by those who are strong enough to bear them, if they so desire. It is not a tale for the emotional or the faint-hearted, this story of modern war, which has stirred half the world and is already beginning to arouse the other half to the realization of the fact that war, in the sense of a former day, has disappeared, and that, as now conducted, it is sheer wholesale butchery on scientific principles—the deliberate slaughter of great masses of humanity. This is the book of which Alfred Noyes wrote that if it were once laid before the public in any country, it "would put an end to militarism in a year."

MANLINESS

BY WILFRED T. GRENFELL, C.M.G.

A GROUP of fishermen were standing on our deck one morning at sea when one of the skippers turned to me and said, "I tell you, doctor, that young Jack Richards over there is every inch a man." "What makes you say so?" I replied. "Well," he answered, "to begin with, he is as strong as a horse, and as fit as a fiddler. His dad was always said to be a strong man, but Jack could carry a puncheon of pork up the rigging while he was looking at it."

"A fine animal; it must take a lot to feed him," I suggested.

"Not a bit of it," he answered. "He eats enough, I suppose, but you couldn't tempt him to eat for eating's sake. He is not like most young fellows, who eat all they can lay their hands on."

"Does he drink?"

"No."

"Smoke?"

"No."

"I see he cuts his hair," I answered, as my eye fell on his short, crisp, curly hair.

"You are making fun, doctor."

"On the contrary, I was thinking of the young Samson. He certainly was a man if there was one, because he could say, 'I won't' as well as 'I will.' He didn't do what everyone else did." "Why didn't he?" "Well, skipper, I think it was because he was head and shoulders above the ordinary run of young fellows. He could say, 'I won't do things either because I want to, or because the others want me to. I'm going to be my own master.' Only he put it, 'I am going to be master of myself.'"

DR. W. T. GRENFELL, C.M.G.

"Then you think, doctor, that Samson was a real man?"

"Indeed, I do. I loved every inch of him."

"But he failed, didn't he?"

"So did every man, but one. But, like David, he showed his manliness in never giving up. That's what I call manliness or manlikeness—like a man and not a craven coward. But tell me what made you suddenly say, 'Jack is every inch a man'?"

"Oh, a thousand things. You know it was he who volunteered to go alone to save the crew of the Primrose when no one else would venture. It was dark and blowing a gale in the shallow water on the tail end of the Dogger Bank—and they saved eight mothers' sons that night. The sea smashed the bilge of their small boat, getting her over the side. Jack patched the hole over with a piece of tin can and oakum. And that's only one of a dozen of his ventures. He used to be always in trouble as a lad over practical joking. I shall never forget when he first went skipper. He was only twenty-one, and to celebrate the event he had to do something. The admiral had had a splendid leg of mutton sent from home by the cutter, and it was hanging over his counter to thaw out as the vessel dipped her stem into the seas. Jack managed to get that mutton in his own boat in the night, and had the face to ask the admiral and the vice-admiral to come and eat it."

"Was that what made you pay Jack such a splendid tribute so suddenly, skipper?"

"No. It was this: You know lots of young fellows are lost putting fish on the carrier, so as to get big prices when bad weather at sea makes the markets empty? Well, the new law makes it manslaughter for the skipper to force the lads to ferry it aboard when the admiral didn't hoist his flags to do so. Every one said it wouldn't be any good, as young fellows can't bear to be called ninnies, and the admiral himself cannot afford to be unpopular. Well, the whole fleet was for choosing Jack for admiral this fall, and that meant a big thing for him with his young wife and kids. The best lot knew he was a snapper for getting fish, and they all knew he wasn't afraid of anything. So as winter was coming the bad lot thought he'd give them a chance to make their men go if it blew a cyclone. We skippers met this morning to settle it. Jack was there himself. It all went his way, and he had the flags for sure when up he gets and says very quiet like, 'I don't want no mistake made. If you chooses me for admiral, I'm not going to tempt the men, and I'll take no fool risks boarding.' You never saw a more startled crowd. They all called him everything, and all he answered was, 'It's all I've got to say.' Well, he lost the flags, and there he is playing the fool as usual, as happy as a sandhopper—as if he hadn't lost twenty-five dollars a week, all for—" . . . "For the sake of being a real man, like our Master," I intercepted.

SENSE AND NONSENSE

CONDUCTED BY JOSIAH ALLEN'S WIFE

I HAD a trial with Josiah yesterday morning, but it was nothing to the anxiety and trouble I had with him later in the day. He wuz bound to eat sassage for breakfast. It hain't good for him, for his liver hain't workin' good. But he bought two pounds the night before, and as I'd made my plans for breakfast (tender lamb chops briled, creamed potatoes, nice light rolls and coffee wuz what I'd planned), I went on with it and left the sassage in the store-room.

Marietta Holley

Author of Samantha at Coney Island

But when Josiah come in from doin' the barn chores, he walked up to the stove, looked down with disdainful linement onto the delicious food I wuz preparin', said not a word, but put on a big fryin' pan himself, and cooked the whole two pounds and took it up on a immense platter and set it before him at the table, and et and et till I trembled for his digestive tracks and sez:

"Josiah, so much sassage is dretful bad for your liver." "Who is runnin' my liver, Samantha Allen? I hain't afraid to eat nails or handspeeks if I wanted to!"

"Oh, well, eat away, if you want to suffer accordin'."

He acted real high-headed, but I guess he drawed in the rains of his appetite a little. Men will do so sometimes, they listen in their souls to their lovin' and anxious pardners, but won't own up to it (men are queer, and to tell the truth wimmen are queer too, dog queer).

Well, it wuzn't an hour before he come in and said he wanted some pepmint.

And I sez, "You're a larnin' 'bout that sassage. I told you so, Josiah."

"I tole you so!" he muttered; "that is the meanest, most ornery thing a woman can say, 'I tole you so!'" He despises them words, and I guess the most of his sect do.

And right here I want to say in the name of justice, men don't throw that remark at their pardners so often as wimmen do. But I've reasoned it out this way. If men hadn't any way of swingin' out and doin' as they are a minter; if they hadn't their "historic rights" and their pardners had 'em mebby they'd ketch up any old wordy weepen to protect themselves with if things didn't go right, would use this weak and complainin' metafor as a safety valve to let off their sense of wrong and onjestice. "I told you so, didn't I tell you how it would be?" I throw out this idee to the public free; anybody can use it, it hain't patented. But to resoom backwards. Josiah sez:

"I hain't hearin' from no sassage, it wuz your bread I et this mornin' that ails me."

"Why, Josiah, that bread wuz as light as a feather."

"Yes, it wuz too light; it wouldn't stay down; it riz up in my diafram."

I didn't argy with him, for he looked white round his mouth as anything. I got him some pepmint with a little soda in it, and he laid down on the lounge, and I guess he droze off, for pretty soon he got up real pert lookin' and actin'.

And after he went out and I hearn him whistlin' in the back yard as he watered his stock, I sot and meditated for some time on the momentious question of givin' advice and not givin' it. My dishwater got cold onheeded, and the cat mewed in vain for her basin of milk, as I sot and pondered on the deep question of how fur we are our brother's keeper, and our pardnerses, and how fur we ort to try to control 'em and head 'em off.

It is terrible tuff for a well wisher and promiscous adviser to keep still and see them they love hangin' over brinks, without hollerin' at 'em. But then I methought if you holler too loud and vehement, they may rare up and fall over all together, jest to show their independent sperit.

It takes lots of wisdom and lots of tact, which is wisdom in soft soled slippers, to know when to give advice freely and when to refrain from givin' it at all. Whether a anxious and devoted wife had better spend her breath, and the hard worked gray matter of her brain, in advisin' and worryin' over her pardner's culinary and other imprudences, and so incur his snappy and onbelievin' remarks, or to keep still and let him swing out and go the length of his chain, and let the hard knotty hands of Experience and Sufferin' take holt on him and draw him back to the right way.

And I declare, as long as I meditated on it and as cold as my dishwater got, and as loud as the cat expostulated with me, I couldn't for my life decide whether it wuz best in duty's name, to mind other folkses bizness or to keep demute and mind my own bizness.

But I did conclude it wuz pretty safe to do the latter the biggest heft of the time, and I know Josiah agrees with me. I know he would ruther suffer quite a good deal, than be advised by his lovin' and anxious pardner for his own good.

And I made some resolves, and rehet my dishwater, and fed the cat, with my mind considerable sereen and settled down. But I spoze like as not the very next time I see Josiah meanderin' off into a dangerous path I shall try to stop his meanderin', and head him off. I d'no as I could help it, such is weak human nater, specially female human nater.

g the real heroes must be mentioned William E. Johnson, or "Pussy-foot" Johnson, as he is called, who was appointed to do free lance detective work under United States Indian Commissioner Francis E. Leupp to prevent the sale of liquor to American Indians. He and his staff faced danger and death in strenuous raids and battles against the "whisky-peddlers." Eight of his aides were killed and a number terribly wounded in the "war." Altogether, in six years, 7,578 arrests were made. In Indian Territory alone, in the quick campaign conducted by Johnson and his men before its union with Oklahoma and admission as a State, "a quarter of a million bottles of liquor were smashed and seventy-six gambling houses destroyed. About 1,600 separate seizures were made, and something like a thousand men were arrested.

The names of men who forfeited their lives in this war against illegal liquor business under Johnson's leadership ought to be put down in this list of temperance heroes. They are Sam Roberts, John Morrison, Randolph W. Cathey, George Williams, Charley Escalanti, Will H. Stanley, Dr. Walter Reed and Robert L. Bowman. To this list of temperance martyrs should be added the name of Roderick Dhu Gambrell, a young editor of a Prohibition paper in Jackson, Miss., who was the leader in a local option contest which banished the saloons from the city. He was assassinated, at the age of twenty-two, in 1887.

ES AND HEROINES OF THE TEMPERANCE Christian Endeavor and B. Y. P. U. Sunday, August 10, 1913. Dan. 1:

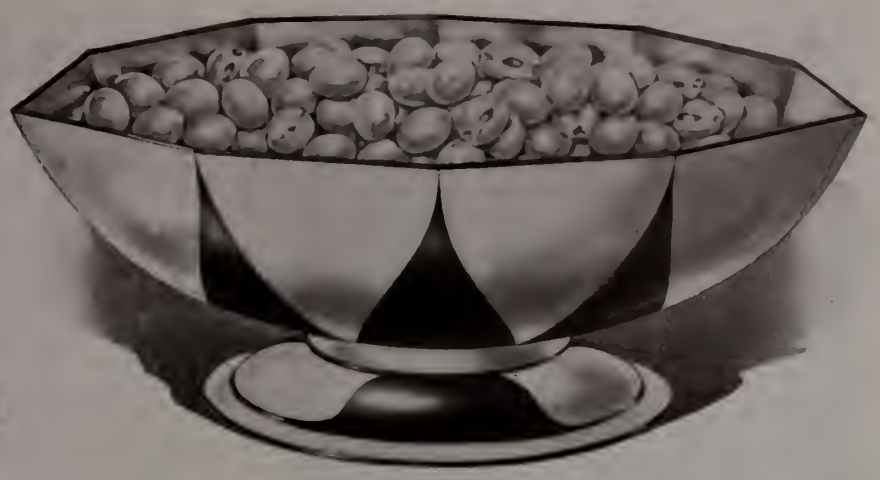
The Opportunity in Our Daily Tasks*

IT IS perhaps true that some writers and teachers have over-emphasized the gospel of contentment with our lot. It is not always well to be contented with our lot. Advancement in every line has been made by people who were discontented with their present opportunities and broke through to something higher. But, even allowing this, it is undeniably true that there is a vast amount of unholy and wasteful discontent. We are apt to think pretty constantly how much more and how much better we would do if circumstances were different. While history presents many cases of people who broke away from a humble task to force their way to something higher, it is fuller of instances in which a man or woman, by doing with patient faithfulness an insignificant task, has been called to greater things.

The answer to the problem is the old rule of living by the minute. It is almost never right to leave a task unfinished. This day, this hour, this minute puts a task into our hands. Our business, both as citizens of this world and as citizens of heaven, is to do it well and finish it. Only God can tell what part that little task of ours may have in the great world's work and in his eternal plans. Our small task is linked with a thousand great matters. Remember the old proverb: "Because of the nail the shoe was lost; because of the shoe the horse was lost; because of the horse the rider was lost; because of the rider the battle was lost." So it was the blacksmith, after all, who lost the battle. If he had done his work well, the cause might have triumphed.

We do our daily work as servants and friends of Christ. We may bring credit to him by doing it well; we bring discredit to him and may bring temporary disaster to his cause by doing it poorly. Is any other incentive needed to careful and skilful work than the thought that he is watching us and hoping that we shall do well?

* "THE OPPORTUNITY IN OUR DAILY TASKS TO HONOR CHRIST." Epworth League Topic for Sunday, August 10, 1913. II Kings 5: 1-6; Gen. 40: 6-8; Acts 9: 39-41.



Around This Dish Mornings and Nights Millions of Young Folks Gather

A few years ago no one ever dreamed of such foods as Puffed Rice and Puffed Wheat.

Perfect kernels, puffed to eight times normal size. Grains toasted by heat, exploded by steam, made into airy bubbles.

Now countless people, every morning, serve them with cream and sugar. Or mix them with their berries.

Now countless suppers, every night, consist of these crisp, porous grains floating in bowls of milk.

Now forty million dishes monthly are consumed by people who have learned the delight of them.

Bubbles of Grain

These are bubbles of grain, with a myriad cells—four times as porous as bread.

With thin toasted walls which easily crush, and become delicious morsels.

With an almond flavor, a nut-meat taste, created by applying 550 degrees of heat.

They are both foods and confections. Thousands use them in place of nuts—in candy making and as garnish for ice cream.

Puffed Wheat, 10c
Puffed Rice, 15c
Except in Extreme West

Inside of each grain there occur in the making a hundred million steam explosions.

Each separate food granule is blasted to pieces by exploding the moisture within it.

As a result, digestion instantly acts. Whole grains, for the first time, are made wholly digestible.

That was the sole object of the inventor—Prof. A. P. Anderson. He aimed to produce the best-cooked foods in existence. When he did, he found he had also created two most delightful foods.

Get them for summer meals—for breakfasts, for luncheons, for suppers. Serve with cream, or with berries, or in bowls of milk. In no other cereal can you find the fascination which folks find in Puffed Wheat and Puffed Rice.

New Coupon Offe

Five Months—Thirty Cents

SO many of our friends who are working to bring the circulation of The Christian Herald Million Mark have written in asking for more coupons, and also for extra time in which t coupons, that we have decided to extend the time through August. We had somewhat experience last year, with the result that many more thousands were added to the Family than w been had we held to our first intention and refused to receive any more coupons after July 31.

We cannot afford, however, to continue offering six months' subscriptions. We think it best short-term subscriptions should expire with the year, so while we are compelled to curtail this of months, we at the same time are reducing the price to 30 cents.

And as an extra inducement to our friends who have been working so faithfully, we hereby that to all such as send in Six or More Coupons, we shall present, with our compliments (and in to the regular premiums listed on the next page), a Red Letter New Testament, bound in divinit red-under-gold edges, with bookmark, Authorized Version, with every word recorded therein a been spoken by our Lord printed in Red.

That is to say, anyone who sends in Six or More Coupons will receive either the 25 Beautiful Pictures described in our issue of July 2, or a copy of the Red Letter New Testament, in ad the regular premiums described on the next page. All who sent in one or more coupons du may now increase the number to six and get credit for those already sent.

This is an unprecedented offer. Nothing so extensive has ever before been offered by The C Herald. It is an opportunity of which all the present members should take advantage to ex influence of The Christian Herald and the principles for which it stands.

We could not afford to make this offer at all had not our experience been that a very large pe of such short-term subscribers send in their renewals at the end of the period, and thus become pe members of the Christian Herald Family.

The subscription list of The Christian Herald is greater to-day than ever before in its history to say, more people are reading The Christian Herald every week and are feeling its influence any year since the paper was founded. We hope to be able to double this influence before C Herald Day, October 24, 1913, when the publication will be thirty-five years old. We can surely if every present member will influence the sending in of only one coupon with the name o subscriber written thereon. We can multiply the influence of The Christian Herald manyfold member will pledge him or herself to send in six coupons.

Will you not do your share? Surely, you must know of several friends who would be better reading The Christian Herald weekly. As we have stated before, it is a form of home missionar which you cannot afford to overlook. In due time these friends will feel in their hearts the soul-i messages which The Christian Herald voices each week. And before long we shall have gotte co-operation secured for the extension of the Redeemer's Kingdom.

The Red Letter New Testame which is given as a reward in the offer above is the same as we have been selling for one dollar per copy. This Testament was especially designed by the late Dr. Louis Klopsch and contains the Authorized Version printed in black, except that every word recorded therein as having been spoken by our Lord is printed in Red.

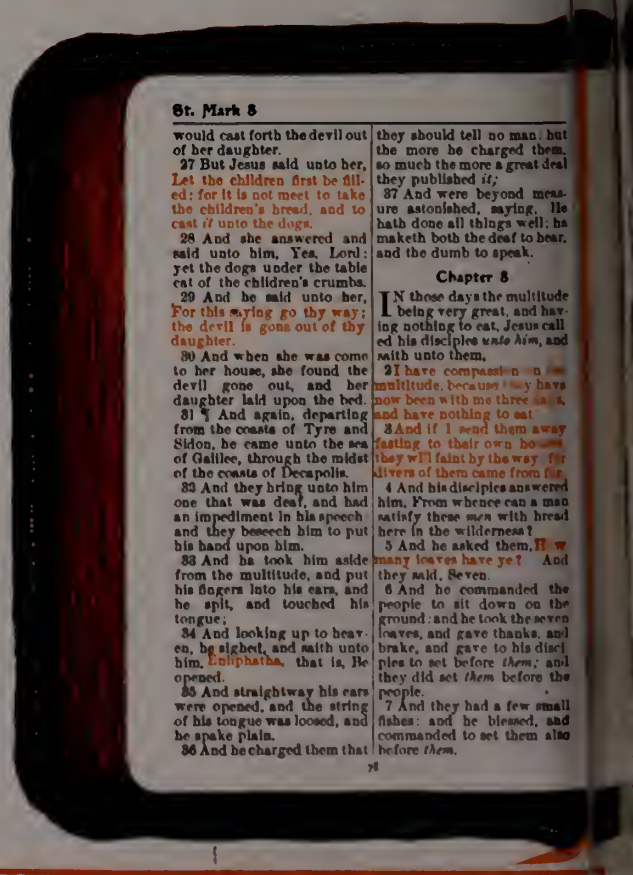
As the Sunday School Lessons for 1914 concern themselves with the life of our Saviour and are all taken from the New Testament, this Testament now offered will prove invaluable to all Sunday School workers and pupils.

To every person who sends us six coupon subscriptions, properly endorsed and accompanied by 30 cents each, we will send this Red Letter Testament free of all charge.



St. Mark 8

would cast forth the devil out of her daughter.
27 But Jesus said unto her, Let the children first be filled: for it is not meet to take the children's bread, and to cast it unto the dogs.
28 And she answered and said unto him, Yes, Lord: yet the dogs under the table eat of the children's crumbs.
29 And he said unto her, For this saying go thy way; the devil is gone out of thy daughter.
30 And when she was come to her house, she found the devil gone out, and her daughter laid upon the bed.
31 ¶ And again, departing from the coasts of Tyre and Sidon, he came unto the sea of Galilee, through the midst of the coasts of Decapolis.
32 And they bring unto him one that was deaf, and had an impediment in his speech; and they beseech him to put his hand upon him.
33 And he took him aside from the multitude, and put his fingers into his ears, and he spit, and touched his tongue;
34 And looking up to heaven, he sighed, and saith unto him, Ephphatha, that is, Be opened.
35 And straightway his ears were opened, and the string of his tongue was loosed, and he spake plain.
36 And he charged them that they should tell no man: but the more he charged them, so much the more a great deal they published it;
37 And were beyond measure astonished, saying, He hath done all things well: he maketh both the deaf to hear, and the dumb to speak.

Chapter 8

IN those days the multitude being very great, and having nothing to eat, Jesus called his disciples unto him, and saith unto them,
2 I have compassion on the multitude, because they have now been with me three days, and have nothing to eat:
3 And if I send them away fasting to their own houses, they will faint by the way: for divers of them came from far.
4 And his disciples answered him, From whence can a man satisfy these men with bread here in the wilderness?
5 And he asked them, How many loaves have ye? And they said, Seven.
6 And he commanded the people to sit down on the ground: and he took the seven loaves, and gave thanks, and brake, and gave to his disciples to set before them; and they did set them before the people.
7 And they had a few small fishes: and he blessed, and commanded to set them also before them.

NOTE Every person who sends us Six Coupons, properly endorsed an accompanied by 30 cents each, will not only receive the regula reward described on the opposite page, but will also receive as gift the Red Letter New Testament, or 25 Beautiful Bible Pictures, and will hav the satisfaction of placing the influence of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD i homes where the influence may be needed. A FRIEND IN NEED

THE SMALLER BUILDINGS OF THE EVANGELICAL LUTHERAN SANITARIUM

IT IS the old story with which Coloradians are so familiar. Back East on some farm or in a prosperous city of the Middle West, a young man is carrying within him the seeds of consumption. The biting winds from the sea or lakes or the heavy humid atmosphere of sultry summer hasten the deadly work, and the subject becomes weak, worn and mentally weary.

When it is almost too late, the doctor says: "Try Denver." The doctor, believing he is counseling wisdom, often urges the departure, and tells the unfortunate "he has a fine chance to get well out there; no need of going to a sanitarium in Denver; the change of climate is all that is necessary." The family is not well off, but they manage to buy the young man a railway ticket, besides giving him forty or fifty dollars, and away he goes. He is full of hope. His fond purpose is to breathe the rich air and quickly get well. He expects to find some light work to do that his waning strength will permit, and that will pay his way. In a few months he will return cured and his life will be henceforth glorious and serene. So the good doctor and everybody have assured him, and he therefore leaves home full of hope.

He comes directly to Denver. He gets a harsh jolt the very day of his arrival. He finds there is no light work to be done. The supply by four times exceeds the demand. He comes across a score of young men like himself, aimlessly walking the streets, lounging in the parks, sitting around cheap hotels, studying the bulletin boards of employment bureaus, all having vainly tried for occupation that will not require much manual labor. He soon feels that he is "up against it." The thrift and frugality of his bringing up comes into play, and he does the fatal thing. That forty or fifty dollars in his pocket must be nursed carefully. It must be made to go as far as possible. He must watch the expenditure of every cent. There is not much money back home. He must do the very best he can with what he has. So he does the very worst, from a hygienic point of view. He gets the cheapest lodgings he can find, down in the Larimer Street section of the city. He buys the poorest, the least nourishing food. He sleeps in an improperly ventilated room and breathes tainted air.

Poor, poor unfortunate! He thinks he is practicing the sharpest economy. He is, in a way, but his weakened vitality is being sapped and Colorado is thus doing him far more harm than good. But he remains brave, and patient, and hopeful, until some evening he is found sitting on the steps of some residence too weak to rise. Then he is carried away to the county hospital. The proper attention has come too late. By and by a letter goes to the folks back home, telling them that "Charlie passed away last night; his last words were of his mother, or his sister, or his disconsolate sweetheart; that he died hopeful of the future, and—what shall we do with the body?"

Can one imagine anything more pitiful? It is the great human tragedy that is being enacted every day somewhere in that giant sanitarium State of Colorado. There are hundreds and thousands of Charlies in Colorado and what to do for them is a problem that steadily grows more difficult of solution. Eight years ago a little band of Lutherans in Denver tried in a small measure to aid in solving the problem by organizing the Evangelical Lutheran Sanitarium Association of Denver and establishing a home, not so much for those that are blessed with this world's goods and fully able to pay the high rates demanded by some of the sanitaria equipped with every luxury, but more for those less fortunate, for the poor and middle classes. It was to be a semi-charitable institution, not for profit, with rates at cost price, at the same time admitting a limited number of patients unable to pay anything.

The organizers of this noble work, not having the means themselves for this undertaking, found sympathetic hearts and hands among the members of their faith throughout the country, notably in the Lutheran Missouri synod, to assure a successful beginning. Two miles out of Denver, away from the dust, noise and smoke of the city, on the crest of a hill overlooking the beautiful Clear Creek Valley, but a short distance from the foothills of the Rockies, a tent colony of thirty-seven cottages was erected. From the outset the sanitarium management has adopted a policy to which it has adhered to the present day: to work for the benefit of the greatest number of tuberculous patients. While, as the name implies, it is a Lutheran institution, the sanitarium applies the principle of the good Samaritan. The aim has been to make the institution homelike and pleasant to all under its roof, to give the very best treatment known to medical science, to make it a place not harmful but beneficial to the soul. Therefore, a superintendent was called, who is also the chaplain, holding regular divine services, and acting as spiritual adviser. The institution, on account of its very low rates and the great number of charity patients it harbors, will always have a hard row to hoe and never become self-sustaining, but in the future as in the past, hopes to find willing hands ready to aid it in taking care of poor patients.

TWO VIEWS OF THE SANITARIUM

ANSWERED PRAYERS

"HERE is a case of answered prayer, for the accuracy of which I vouch from personal knowledge.

"There was an elderly couple in this city who had been once in comfortable circumstances, but who lost their property through no fault of theirs. They struggled on, and a few years ago the husband died. The aged wife strove with an energy which was heroic to keep her little home, which was all that was left. Moreover, she was a woman of deep piety and laid the matter before God constantly in prayer. One evening this last spring notice came to her from the bank, written with apologies, for they knew and honored her, that they were compelled to foreclose a mortgage. The thing dreaded had apparently come at last. That night she spent in prayer. 'I never closed an eye,' she since told me. While at breakfast next morning, the mail brought her a letter with a check for $500, and this was followed by another for $300 more. The mortgage was paid and the property secured. She is confined to bed now and seems to be nearing home. I visited her the other day and found her happy in God her Saviour, and praising his blessed name. I could furnish names, dates and facts corroborating every part of this statement.

The conference on Immigration was addressed very largely by the foreign delegates. Lieutenant Bosio of Palermo, Italy; Professor Bernt Stoylen of Christiania, Norway; Dr. S. Motoda of Tokyo, Japan; Dr. William Huy of New Zealand, and Pyong K. Yoon of Seoul, Korea, presented the immigration and emigration problems of their various countries. Delegates from many of the European countries, Liberia, Egypt, Canada and Australia entered into the discussion of Sabbath observance. The sectional conference urged the adoption of strong resolutions concerning Mormonism.

The Fourth of July was celebrated by a great Sunday school parade. Hundreds of Sunday schools, representing all the Protestant denominations and almost the entire State of Oregon, made up the parade. There were splendid floats and hundreds of decorated automobiles carried the cradle roll members and the older members of the home departments. A number of foreign delegates voiced their appreciation and impressions of the United States in speeches delivered at the great mass meeting at the Stadium which brought the conference to a close.

Brandeis Attacks Price-cutting

[NOTE.] It takes courage of the highest order to stand firm against uneducated public opinion—for the public's good.

Probably in his life of service Louis D. Brandeis, the great People's Lawyer, has never taken a step that will arouse greater comment than the following article.

Most people who have not studied the subject are against price-maintenance. The consumer thinks it a device to make him pay more; the merchant feels that when he buys the goods of the manufacturer they are his and that it is an infringement of his rights to establish his selling price.

Careful study of the subject, however, shows that the same price everywhere is for the best interests of the buying public, the independent dealer, and the independent manufacturer.

Price-cutting on articles of individuality, Mr. Brandeis maintains, would enable men controlling vast combinations of capital to win local markets one by one, and create monopolies on the things we eat and wear, then raise the prices higher than before.

This article is published by a number of the leading magazines in the belief that by giving wide publicity to the views of so noted a foe to monopoly as Mr. Brandeis the real interests of the enterprising individual manufacturer, the small dealer, and the public will be served.

Price-maintenance Encourages Individual Enterprise

By LOUIS D. BRANDEIS

THE American people are wisely determined to restrict the existence and operation of private monopolies. The recent efforts that have been made to limit the right of a manufacturer to maintain the price at which his article should be sold to the consumer have been inspired by a motive that is good—the desire for free competition—but they have been misdirected. If successful, they will result in the very thing that they seek to curb—monopoly. Price-maintenance—the trade policy by which an individual manufacturer of a trade-marked article insures that article reaching all consumers at the same price—instead of being part of the trust movement is one of the strongest forces of the progressive movement which favors individual enterprise.

The Article with Individuality

THERE is no justification in fixing the retail price of an article without individuality. Such articles do not carry the guarantee of value that identifies them with the reputation of the man who made them. But the independent manufacturer of an article that bears his name or trade-mark says in effect:

"That which I create, in which I embody my experience, to which I give my reputation, is my own property. By my own effort I have created a product valuable not only to myself but to the consumer, for I have endowed this specific article with qualities which the consumer desires and which the consumer may confidently rely upon receiving when he purchases my article in the original package. It is essential that consumers should have confidence in the fairness of my price as well as in the quality of my product. To be able to buy such an article with those qualities is quite as much of value to the purchaser as it is of value to the maker to find customers for it."

The Distinction Drawn

THERE is no improper restraint of trade when an independent manufacturer in a competitive business settles the price at which the article he makes shall be sold to the consumer. There is dangerous restraint of trade when prices are fixed on a common article of trade by a monopoly or combination of manufacturers.

The independent manufacturer may not arbitrarily establish the price at which his article is to be sold to the consumer. If he would succeed he must adjust it to active and potential competition and various other influences that are beyond his control. There is no danger of profits being too large as long as the field of competition is kept open; as long as the incentive to effort is preserved, and the opportunity of individual development is kept untrammeled. And in any branch of trade in which such competitive conditions exist we may safely allow a manufacturer to maintain the price at which his article may be sold to the consumer.

COMPETITION is encouraged, not suppressed, by permitting each of a dozen manufacturers of safety razors or breakfast foods to maintain the price at which his article is to be sold to the consumer.

By permitting price-maintenance each maker is enabled to pursue his business under conditions deemed by him most favorable for the widest distribution of his product at a fair price. He may open up a new sphere of merchandising which would have been impossible without price-protection. The whole world can be drawn into the field. Every dealer, every small stationer, every small druggist, every small hardware man, can be made a purveyor of the article and it becomes available to the public in the shortest time and the easiest manner.

Price-cutting of the one-priced trade-marked article is frequently used as a puller-in to tempt customers who may buy other goods of unfamiliar value at high prices. It tends to eliminate the small dealer who is a necessary and convenient factor for the widest distribution; and ultimately, by discrediting the sale of the article at a fair price, it ruins the market for it.

Abolish Monopoly but not Price-maintenance

OUR efforts, therefore, should be directed not to abolish price-maintenance by the individual competitive manufacturer, but to abolish monopoly, the source of real oppression in fixed prices. The resolution adopted by the National Federation of Retail Merchants at its annual convention draws clearly the distinction pointed out above. The resolution declared that the fixing of retail prices in and of itself is an aid to competition; among other reasons, because it prevents the extension of the trust and chain stores into fields not now occupied by them. But the resolution also expresses the united voice of the retailers against monopoly and against those combinations to restrain trade against which the Sherman law is specifically directed.

Manufacturers and retailers are getting this distinction clearly in their minds, and it must soon be generally recognized by the public. What is needed is clear thinking and effective educational work which will make the distinction clear to the whole people. Only in this way can there be preserved to the independent manufacturer his most potent weapon against monopoly—the privilege of making public and making permanent the price at which his product may be sold, in every State in the Union.

BLACK-EYED SUSANS

A quarter-century ago grandma's mother told her how to bathe a new baby girl. Today she, in turn, passes on the same instructions to that girl now a mother herself.

And here is what she tells her:

"Use soft water at a temperature of 95 degrees in winter and from 85 degress to 90 degrees in summer. Hold baby under a blanket. Moisten washcloth and apply Ivory Soap, first to the face and neck, then to the arms, next to the body, and last to the legs and feet. Remove soap with sponge. 'Pat' dry with a soft towel. Do not rub."

These directions have survived the years because there never has been a soap milder or purer than Ivory and therefore none better suited for cleansing that most delicate of all things, the tender skin of a baby.

A GENERAL VIEW OF ZURICH, SWITZERLAND

SIR ROBERT LAIDLAW, F.R.G.S.

OPENING THE WORLD'S SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTION

FROM OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT

THE high expectations that preceded the World's ay School Cons at Zürich, tzerland, have dy been more exceeded by convention itself. he opening ses- on July 8, the t body of 2,415 delegates began their work with unbounded enasm. Half of the whole number represent the United States, include American missionaries who are credited to the countries hich they labor. Fully one-fourth of the whole are British sub-, and something less than a fourth are other than British or erican. Back of the platform, visible to all in the vast assem- e, were the words of the "Great Commission" in huge letters, this gave the dominant theme of the convention throughout. he convention hall was decorated with beautiful banners pre- ed by grateful Japanese and Korean and Chinese cities. The utation known as "Commission Four" gave its "yell" and sang effective song they had sung in four score cities in many different lands:

Across the waters blue we bring a greeting true,
The world for Christ, the world for Christ, the world for Christ we sing.
In Rome in nineteen-seven, the signal call was given,
The world for Christ, the world for Christ, the world for Christ we sing.

is frankly recognized by the delegates generally that, while Britain began modern Sunday school movement, the United States has carried it to the nest development; but not a note of national jealousy or prejudice has where appeared, and all seem heartily glad to commend and copy what is d in the Sunday school methods of other lands. Sweden and Switzerland Scotland and some other countries where Sunday schools fall short of the erican show some pride in the fact that they excel us in the religious ruction of the young by pastors, and also, as in India, in the general main- ance of systematic Bible reading in home worship. It was well said in one he addresses that the fellowship of international and interdenominational day school work would do more to preserve international peace than all the adnoughts in the world.

ike the snow-capped Alpine ranges about us, several great lines of thought interest loom higher every day. The Mont Blanc that towers heavenward ve all other features of the convention is the spiritual Bible study led by F. B. Meyer of London, whose expositions, given in clear voice, without pering notes, the vast throng from many lands listens to as to a modern ah. Bishop J. H. Vincent and Dr. Floyd W. Tomkins had sounded a high itual note on the first afternoon, which some thought it would be hard to ntain, but the daily Bible expositions of Dr. Meyer at 9:15 A.M. have been ntain climbs to ever higher outlooks and more strengthening breath of ven. The first day he sounded Christ's call to "launch out into the deep," essage for those who had toiled and "taken nothing" or little. The second Dr. Meyer found his message in Gethsemane—Christ asking for partial ase from his bound hand that he might heal the ear of Malchus.

he tides of spiritual power that are stirred by these Bible studies burst the great hymns, as when in English, French and German the great host sang in the opening service, "A Strong Castle Is Our God." Another such occasion was when, after stories of present-day persecutions in the Balkans, we sang with sobs, at the conclusion of Dr. Tipple's address, "Faith of our fathers, living yet in spite of dungeons, fire and sword." Another range of sentiment in the convention is the unity of many nationalities, shown in the spontaneous applause whenever the harmony or humane co-operation of nations is referred to in the addresses.

Christian unity, not organic union, is the enthusiastic faith of the convention. When a speaker from India said: "Denominational and national differences should no more hinder us in Christian work than invisible lines of latitude and longitude hinder navigation," the great audience swiftly made the saying its own.

More surprising was the apparently unanimous applause that endorsed the strongest utterances on the temperance question, which, with the other reforms that sail under the flags of "good citizenship" and "social service" are well represented in the program. When Fred B. Smith of New York, in an arousing speech, said that one great vision which the Sunday school should hold before it and help to realize is the world-wide abolition of the barroom, the audience adopted his proposal in thunders of applause, and in yet louder applause they approved the words of the president, George W. Bailey, needed in many Christian and even in some teetotal homes in Europe, "Small indeed is the number of respectable people in America who find it necessary to serve wine to their guests."

W. C. Pearce of Chicago, associate general secretary of the International Sunday School Association, reported that in the last two years, partly as a result of the "Men and Religion" meetings, more grown men have been added to the Sunday schools of the United States than women or girls or boys—the loss of boys being caused by Sunday ball games and Sunday picture shows, etc. Repeatedly, European speakers lamented that in their countries as yet the Sunday school is almost confined to children from six to fourteen years of age. The example of the best churches in the United States, however, it is anticipated, will lead to conceiving of the Sunday school as the teaching service of the church—the ideal being to bring all the children to the preaching service and all the adults to the teaching service. In no country was this reported as so fully realized as in the spiritual wonderland of Korea.

Foreign missions and the duty and influence of the World's Sunday schools in carrying out the "Great Commission" were kept well to the front at the opening sessions. Representatives of almost every mission field are here, about two hundred in all, feeling that their work is fully appreciated. Commissions of the World's Sunday School Association have visited every part of the mission world and are bringing in reports that touch not only hearts but pocketbooks. One of the most dramatic moments of the convention was when India had been well reported by its general secretary, Rev. Richard Burgess, and also by Rev. D. Reid, B.D., Miss Emily Huntley and Mr. W. H. Stannes. "A Message from Scotland" was mysteriously announced and Mr. J. Cunningham told how Scotland's Sunday schools had raised, much of it in pennies, from the poor children, $8,000 for union Sunday school work in India, which

NORTH AGAINST SOUTH IN CHINA

DR. SUN YAT SEN

THE secession of still more of the southern provinces of the Chinese Republic has focused the attention of all the nations on the developments in connection with the struggle against the authority of President Yuan Shi Kai and the government at Peking. On July 19 Governor General Chan of Canton issued a proclamation, declaring the secession of that important section from the north. At the request of the provincial council he has assumed command. The same advices state that Shanghai has also declared its independence. This has led to the belief in the State Department at Washington that the present revolution, far from being a local disaffection, is a highly organized movement extending throughout the Chinese Republic. So alarming was the information last April to the State Department from Shanghai, where Sun Yat Sen was then living, that recognition was postponed by President Wilson. It is supposed here that the same movement has now appeared on the surface.

It has also been reported, though as yet without full confirmation, that there has been a fight between 2,000 northern soldiers under General Chang Hsun and 4,000 southern troops from Nankin at a point north of Kiangsu. The rebel troops were defeated. Dr. Sun Yat Sen, the first provincial president appointed by the National Assembly at Nankin, has finally taken sides openly with the Southerners by proceeding to Nankin. The Southern leaders there, it is said, are disheartened at the defeat near Kiangsu and the fact that Wuchang remains loyal to the government. A Shanghai despatch to the Exchange Telegraph Company of London, England, says the British, German and French diplomats support President Yuan Shi Kai, while the actions of the American and Japanese ministers show that they recognize that the revolutionaries have distinct grievances. Many people think that the American and Japanese diplomacy will ultimately succeed in bringing about a settlement of these grievances.

July 21 brought two absolutely contradictory despatches. Through London came the announcement which read as follows: "Ten warships, including four cruisers, are at Shanghai in support of the Southerners, according to a Peking despatch to the Telegraph, and are cruising near the Wusung forts. Seventy-five hundred Southern troops have surrounded sixteen hundred Northerners at the Kiangnan arsenal, and its fall is inevitable."

The contradiction comes from Shanghai, saying: "The government has secured the loyalty of the navy by arranging with the five-power group of bankers for the regular payment of the crews. The Southern General Cheo Pikai has joined the Northern forces.

As these statements are characteristic of all the despatches, it is extremely difficult to ascertain the real truth concerning the progress of events. It is, however, quite safe to assume that there have been no very serious developments. The latest and most disturbing news comes through London, saying: "The position of the Northerners at Kiukiang in the Province of Kiangsi is becoming precarious. The Sixth Division is virtually surrounded, and Northern reinforcements are unable to cross the Yangtsekiang, which is dominated by the Southern guns. Everything hinges on whether the Kiukiang forts and the still loyal troops go over to the Southerners. If they do so, the despatch says, the Northerners are liable to destruction.

In Washington the news from China that Sun Yat Sen has come out in the open against Yuan Shi Kai and that the Province of Kwangtung has declared its independence of the central government indicates that the situation in the new republic is serious. Officials of the government, however, are not yet ready to believe that Yuan Shi Kai is actually in danger. Great significance is attached to the fact that Dr. Sun has openly joined the revolution. been threatening trouble for months. So far as is known, while grea is felt in Peking, the revolution has not assumed an anti-American c

HELP NEEDED FOR CHINA'S ORPHANS

IN CHINA, according to the latest reports, there are 5,144 foreign ries (Protestant), 308 medical missionaries, 15,501 native Chine 3,879 mission stations and outstations, 2,955 congregations, and 324, municants. These figures are steadily growing, and notwithstan temporary embarrassment of all missionary work during the revolu new China is heading toward Christianity. Under Provisional Presi Yat Sen, religious toleration was asured, and President Yuan Shi declared emphatically: "One thing I have determined is that there religious liberty throughout the land." Vice President Li, in a rece view, said: "Missionaries are our friends. Jesus is better than Co and I am strongly in favor of more missionaries coming to Chin military governor of Yunnan Province gave this strong utteranc greatest religion in the world is the religion of Jesus Christ. Bef the Christian religion will be the religion of our China."

Never had Protestant missions such an opportunity in any foreign in China to-day. This is the uniform conviction of the most experien sionaries, American and European. High government officials and u and navy, heretofore unapproachable, are giving earnest heed to the ing of the Gospel and some are even taking a part in the meetings.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has undertaken the care of 1,200 little orphans, who are now being sheltered and taught at a number of mis stations, Hsuchoufu, Tsingkiangpu, Nankin, Changsha, Sinch'anghsier hsien, Chinkiang, Foochow, Ningpo, Ngucheng, Hankow, Ichang, Ha Shanghai, Kiukiang, Saratsi and other places. OPENING THE WORLD'S SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTION he presented to Mr. Burgess. "The little white hands of the West," he said, "are stretched out to clasp and lift up the little brown hands of the East."

But a loftier height of missionary enthusiasm was reached on the third evening of the convention in the wonderful story told in words and pictures by H. J. Heinz, Frank L. Brown and W. G. Landes of the Missionary Visitation of the Orient, in which they were assisted by other laymen and women, mostly business men and their wives. These zealous friends not only paid their own expenses but devoted five months in an effort to encourage, increase and improve Sunday schools in Hawaii, the Philippines, Japan, Korea and China. They held successful meetings in seventy-four cities. That which especially challenged the attention of the press and of the higher classes was that business men counted the Sunday school worthy not only of large gifts but also of their active co-operation. That a business man of great wealth, whose financial success was known throughout the world, should put in thousands of dollars and much valuable time into an extended visita of missionary Sunday schools was a subject general wonder.

The great plan, which has been maturing for years past, with the object of influencing the O ental third of the world's population, reached climax at 10.30 P.M., when the vast audie voted unanimously to accept the invitation of J pan to hold the next World's Sunday School C vention in Tokio in 1916. The president will pr ably be Sir Robert Laidlaw, M.P., who has giv ever $50,000 to missions in the Orient.

ROWTH OF CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR

VENTY-SIXTH INTERNATIONAL CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR CONVENTION AT LOS ANGELES

E centuries ago a young Carpenter, walk- along the beach of the Sea of Galilee, at village of Capernaum, asked two fisher- n to follow him. A few days ago the repre- es of a single department of his followers, d chiefly of young men and women and ng nearly four million, met in conference utiful southern city near the Pacific at the coast of our new land. More than ten d delegates gathered at Los Angeles from to 14 for the twenty-sixth International ion of the United Society of Christian or.

ere figures of the growth and achievements Christian Endeavor movement are stagger- r. Francis E. Clark, the beloved founder and t of the world-wide organization, in his ion report said:

difficult to get exact figures concerning an ation that has reached every quarter of the whose members speak a hundred different es, and whose statistics, if given this month, far below the mark next month; but it is say that the one society of February 2, 1881, tiplied one hundred thousand times, and the fifty members have grown to five millions. enumeration I am counting those societies ave substantially the Christian Endeavor es and methods, the great majority of which e Christian Endeavor name and fellowship. average generation of mankind throughout rld is reckoned at three and thirty years; average generation of active Endeavorers is ess than this, probably not more than six though many, I am glad to say, give to the many more years of active service. Un- fly, at a low estimate, fifteen millions of people in these nearly thirty-three years assed through the open door of Christian or.

"At least ten million former members are now active and useful in church work to a degree far in excess of what would have been their activity without their Christian Endeavor training. There have been at least four million associate members brought to Christ and into church membership, in part through the influence of the society. At least twenty millions of dollars have been given to local church, missionary and charitable objects by Endeavorers. More than fifty millions of young people's meetings have been held, with an aggregate attendance of at least one billion five hundred millions. At least one hundred thousand union meetings and conventions representing all evangelical denominations have also been held, with an aggregate attendance of fifty millions, giving a tremendous impetus towards interdenominational fellowship.

"But who can reckon in millions or billions the amount of Christly activity in prisons and hospitals, or ships, among the poor, in fresh-air camps, for Sabbath observance, municipal reform, civic betterment, temperance, social purity, for evangelism, Bible study, mission study, systematic giving, and for international peace and arbitration? Who can weigh, measure, or tabulate the religious influence and impulse of these generations of Christian Endeavorers? I have rehearsed them that we may record our gratitude to God, and that we may begin our next generation—get a "running start," as it were, toward our second three and thirty years with new courage, with new purposes, with higher aims for a larger and more substantial advance in all noble endeavors."

To provide for the vast audiences at the Los Angeles convention, Fiesta Park was covered with canvas, forming two auditoriums, accommodating nearly twenty thousand people. One was used as headquarters for the States and the other for the great mass meetings. In addition simultaneous meetings were held in the Temple Auditorium and a score of churches. The music of the convention, in charge of Mr. L. F. Peckham and Mr. Perry S. Foster, was led by a chorus of a thousand voices and an orchestra of fifty pieces.

Among the striking features of the week were the evangelistic services led by "Billy" Sunday, as a result of which hundreds of people professed conversion and thousands of Christians were quickened and inspired to more Christlike living and more strenuous service. A street parade of ten thousand Endeavorers formed at Central Park and marched, to the music of bands and with the singing of hymns, to the convention tent. Another spectacular event was the Junior Endeavor rally in which five hundred children gathered on the convention platform, and, with song, symbol and tableaux, retold the Gospel story.

While no votes are taken in the conventions, the delegates, by signing cards adopted Dr. Clark's suggestion that the week in which the anniversary of the founding of Christian Endeavor falls, February 2, be made an "Increase and Efficiency Week," which shall be a time of self-denial, ingathering, and plans for new triumphs. One of the most important decisions made during convention week was the inauguration of an advanced campaign for "Temperance and Christian Citizenship" under the leadership of Daniel A. Poting. A program of education and agitation was adopted, aiming at the annihilation of the liquor business and following the motto: "A Saloonless Nation by 1920." Plans are already being made for a convention in the interests of this campaign to be held at Columbus this autumn.

Among the prominent convention speakers were William Shaw, secretary of the United Society; Dr. Charles M. Sheldon, Dr. John Balcolm Shaw, President Henry Churchill King, Dr. A. L. Phillips, and Dr. Ira Landreth.

scales tipping toward the left, where in brilliant colors the word "Soul" clearly outweighs "Money" and "Pleasure" indicated by lines of green and red in the opposite side, surmounted by the drawing of a globe signifying the possibility of "gaining the whole world."

At the close of his address, the preacher asked how many in his audience were Christians. The show of hands was a revelation, an evidence of "righteousness in high places" and of courage of conviction. The psychological effect was apparent in the readiness and boldness with which other hands were raised in response to the next question as to how many would like to begin then and there to lead Christian lives.

The Evangelistic Committee of New York City is now in the midst of its ninth tent, open-air and shop campaign. Tent meetings have been held for Italians, Hungarians, Bohemians, Poles and Slavs, and Swedes. Open-air meetings are conducted in the principal squares of the city and at the street corners in widely divergent sections of all the boroughs. M. K. H.

DEFEATED BULGARIA SUES FOR PEACE

HE enemies who have encompassed Bulgaria in the new campaign in the Balkans have finally reduced her to a state of willingness to conclude peace agreements without fur- ecourse to arms. The victorious Roumanians ervians have pressed their lines almost to the of Sofia. The Greeks have added one victory ther in Southern Macedonia, driving the Bul- is before them. Turkey, by a swift unopposed across Thrace, has again occupied Adrianople. July 22 the new Bulgarian cabinet, under the ership of M. Radoslavoff, formally notified the s of its readiness to order the cessation of ties immediately if the Powers could induce and Greece to take a similar course. The ing day Servia and Greece signified their ment to this proposition and also to the pro- that peace negotiations take place in Buch- The delegates of the warring Balkan Powers their deliberations during the last week of July. Roumania has agreed not to interfere with railway or telegraphic communication between Sofia and Northern Bulgaria while the peace negotiations are in progress.

Czar Nicholas of Russia is reported to have sent a message to King Ferdinand in response to Bulgaria's appeal to Russia to end the war, expressing sympathy with Bulgaria's reverses, and joy at the prospect of peace, adding, however, that the Bulgarians must be prepared to make sacrifices.

A London despatch announces that the Powers have as yet reached no decision as to what shall be done to compel Turkey to respect the recent Treaty of London and withdraw from Adrianople. From Sofia, however, comes the report that Bulgaria has been reassured by Western Europe that Turkey's reclaiming of Thrace will be looked after by the concert of Powers. The same cablegram reports that news has reached Vienna of a great movement of troops in Southern Russia. The cable adds: "This is obviously for the coercion of Turkey."

A long cablegram, dated from Salonica on July 23, and which bears the following signatures, the Rev. A. Mihitsopoulos, Greek Evangelical Church; the Rev. M. Brounau, German Evangelical Church; the Rev. O. M. Khouvania, Armenian Evangelical Church, and the Rev. Edward B. Haskell, American missionary, repeats with great detail the stories of Bulgarian atrocities. Among other details the despatch states that at Seres 4,050 houses are burned, 1,000 stores and 18 churches, including the Metropole Synagogue, as well as hospitals, mosques, and colleges. More than $3,000,000 damage was done and 20,000 inhabitants are without homes, clothes, or food.

In the country around these scenes of horror continue. At the village of Doxato, out of 3,000 inhabitants 2,500 have been murdered. The villages are destroyed, the farmsteads burned, and the peasants massacred are uncountable.

WHEN THE CHIEF SHEPHERD APPEARS

*A SERMON BY REV. W. J. LOCKHART, D.D.

TEXT: "And when the Chief Shepherd shall appear." I Peter 5: 4

THERE is no room for doubt as to the identity of the person called "Chief Shepherd" by the writer of the epistle from which the text is chosen. Nowhere else in the Bible is the word for "chief shepherd" to be found. There are some titles which should be like hallowed ground, not to be desecrated by common usage—like priceless marble statues, chipped by the mallet of modern man. To be a pastor is an honor great enough for any mortal. No pastor should seek to be the wearer of that unique title "Chief Shepherd," which is for the one unique personality—the Christ.

We know that in New Testament usage "shepherd," "pastor," "bishop" and "elder" are synonymous. Our text tells us of the chief pastor, the chief bishop, the chief elder, the chief shepherd. Our Lord is the Prince of pastors. There is but one chief, one prince among the thousands of Christian pastors. Is Christ your Pastor? Is he your Chief Pastor?

Some persons have favorite pastors. Is Christ more to you than a favorite pastor—is he your Chief Pastor? But we are to consider the thought that our Chief Shepherd has not returned to us. A ship is lying in the harbor. A little company of men from a nearby city is in conference with one who is to take passage on the ship. He, the central figure, is a pastor, their pastor; he is giving his parting message; he is reviewing his pastorate, not by telling them the number of sermons he preached, the number of marriages he performed, and the funerals at which he has officiated, nor the number of pastoral calls he has made—not even the number of believers he has baptized, nor the money they raised, nor the improvements on church property—none of these, but the subject matter of his address is: "I shrank not from announcing to you the whole counsel of God." Then come words of admonition and warning that from among themselves would arise wolves who would not pastor the flock, but feast upon it, teaching thoughts contrary to the Gospel of our Lord. A prayer, and then the final parting, for Paul had said he would not return; they would look upon that human form no more, never again see the flash of his eye, nor hear the message from his lips. It was an affectionate farewell. Luke says: "Torn ourselves from them." It is the scene when a true pastor is leaving his flock, knowing that he is never to return.

But Paul was not an archbishop nor the archpastor. He never called himself a chief pastor. You remember in what connection he applied the word "chief" to himself? Paul thought of himself as a saved arch-sinner.

The First Pastoral Parting

There is another New Testament pastoral parting, the memory of which is kept fresh in the churches. It occurred in a little upper room, just twelve men in the room, for the one other who could have been there had gone out because of evil in his heart. One of the twelve is a pastor. He is telling the eleven that he is going away and a way that none can go with him. It is a sad message. Not one of the eleven has even in his heart asked for this pastor's resignation or removal. One, at least, is ready to die for his pastor, if we may believe his affirmation. That one is the writer of the words of the text. Peter found in Jesus a pastor—yes, this is the Chief Pastor. "Lord, to whom shall we go? Thou hast the words of eternal life." That night a few hours before the crucifixion Christ said to the little group of disciples, "I am coming again." He was going away, but he would return. Pastors leave their charges never to return; the Chief Pastor left his sheep but he is to return. This was the joyful message on the Mount of Olives. "This Jesus, which was received up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye beheld him going into heaven." The resurrection came and Peter saw the Christ again, but not as of yore, not as the Chief Pastor. Peter received the Comforter and the baptism of the Holy Spirit at Pentecost, yet in our text, written after these events, he says of our Lord, "and when the Chief Shepherd shall appear."

To Peter, the Chief Pastor had not yet returned to his church, either in the resurrection or at Pentecost, or at the destruction of Jerusalem, or at the martyrdom of Stephen, or the death of some saint. He has not yet returned to his church, though centuries have rolled themselves into the folds of heaven's portfolio of history. If the pastor had not returned to his church after his summer's vacation, would not the church be asking why? Did not the pastor when he left for the mountains say he would return? Did not the pastor, when you held a little social for him and wished him a pleasant voyage, say he would return? If the pastor has not returned, will not the church at least search for his body among the mountains without being shamed into doing so by the "school of the prophets," or search the seas to see if he who should be in Nineveh has instead "paid the fare" and gone down from duty to desolation? The church has been pastorless during the summer; the winter is coming, the pastor is tarrying in the Alps or elsewhere; shall not the church ask why? During the summer months many prayers are offered by the churches for the return of pastors, and the knowledge of the sincerity of such prayers makes the pastors willing to return, and in some cases may even hasten their return. How about the Chief Pastor? Have the churches been praying for His return, or desiring it, or asking why he has not returned? Shall a church have a deeper interest in the return of the pastor to it, than of the return of the Chief Pastor to the church?

When Will He Return?

Can we tell why he has not returned? There must be a reason. The easiest reply might be that it is not time for him to return. Yet that is not a very satisfactory answer, for no one knows anything about the time when "the Chief Shepherd shall appear." The Church has not granted its Chief Pastor a vacation with time limits. Peter did not know the time. Paul was not acquainted with the hour. Neither of these inspired men ventured the assertion that the Chief Pastor would not return during their generation. Such a statement would have been one way of saying that they knew something of the duration of the absence of the Christ. We did not know but that he might come this summer, and now that the summer is well-nigh past we do not know but that he may come next winter. Maybe we are getting near to a reason why he has not come to his church. Do you suppose a real pastor would have returned to his church if he thought he was not wanted? He would have gone back to the woods before he would impose himself upon an unwilling or non-receptive audience. Did you ever think that one of the reasons why the Chief Shepherd has not returned to the church he established is because multitudes claiming to be of the church have no desire for his immediate return—his actual presence is not wanted? "Oh," you say, "he is wanted." Yes, wanted how? "Well, he is with his church." Yes, how? "Why, didn't he say, 'Where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I'?"

Does that really satisfy one who loves the Chief Pastor, even if we say nothing of what the Scriptures teach about the subject? When your father passed away were you satisfied, are you satisfied with the thought that he is with you now as he said, "in spirit," and sometimes you feel that he is not so very far away, and you think you cannot do this or that, because you know he disapproved? Is that husband satisfied whose wife has passed away into the golden sunset land and left behind a daughter the very image of herself, and, just like the mother in disposition, another comforter? Where is the so-called love for Christ? Is it true that you love father or wife more than you do Jesus? Don't you want to see that loved one who has gone into the glory land? Suppose it would upset your plans if that loved friend should return to earth. You are willing to dispense with any event next week if you could see some loved friend who has gone to heaven. How about your Chief Pastor? You know where he is, don't you? If you have forgotten, turn to Heb. 10: 12—"but he . . . sat down on the right hand of God." You know what he is doing? If you do not recall you will find verse 13 tells you that he is there in expectation—"from henceforth expecting till his enemies be made the footstool of his feet." Your Chief Pastor is waiting to return. [illegible] the thought: the Lord Jesus Christ is at Go[illegible] hand; he is not idle but he is expecting to r[illegible]rn

That is what he is doing; what are yo[illegible] If you are a follower of Jesus you must fol[illegible] in his hopes, his expectations, even as i[illegible] things. What Jesus is doing up yonder yo[illegible] do down here, and the more it is done h[illegible] quicker heaven will be here. "Thy expecta[illegible] done on earth as it is in heaven." The m[illegible] may not believe that the Chief Pastor is wh[illegible] writer of Hebrews tells us he is instead of v[illegible] church, and probably because nearly all of [illegible] pecting to return is done by him and very l[illegible] the church. No doubt we shall find it as satis[illegible] and as inspirational to believe what the Bi[illegible] to say about it, as any thoughts of the mu[illegible] The Chief Pastor does not stay away fr[illegible] church because he is not anxious to return. T[illegible] church may not be anxious for him to return w[illegible]—some members in the church may want to l[illegible] a little more of their own way or the opportun[illegible] engage in a few more of the things which e[illegible] their attention—but if you know your Chief P[illegible] heart, O church! there is not anything he [illegible] choose in preference to returning to his c[illegible]

The Lord tarries—this Chief Shepherd—and [illegible] Look into Rev. 19: 15. "He will shepherd then [illegible] a rod of iron." Though we are in a book of m[illegible] and of figure and of symbol, yet the context [illegible] it quite clear that the "he" is "the Word of G[illegible] "the King of kings and Lord of lords." Wou[illegible] feel a thrill of joy if our prayers that Christ [illegible] soon be crowned King of kings and Lord of [illegible] were about to be answered? Does mercy—[illegible] angel of divine love—keep the Chief Pastor [illegible] returning to his church? Yes. Pastors ha[illegible] new message, no new Gospel. They shrink not [illegible] declaring unto men the whole counsel of God. [illegible] the Chief Pastor has returned to his church, h[illegible] shepherd, pastor the nations with a rod of iron [illegible] will tread the wine-press of the fierceness o[illegible] wrath of almighty God. Sword-thrusts, garm[illegible] dipped in blood, the roar of war, the snorting of [illegible] horses, the slaughter, vengeance, judgment—[illegible] follow in the wake of the return of the Chief S[illegible] herd to his church. Why, then, does he tarry? [illegible] has another beautiful summer come and gone [illegible] the fields of the earth borne their golden grain [illegible] the trees their ripe and luscious fruits, instea[illegible] there being war and carnage and strife thro[illegible] out all the world. Because of mercy. The har[illegible] is passed and the summer is ended and you are [illegible] saved!

What the Return Will Mean

Mercy is the attitude of that One to you. W[illegible] he returns the door will be shut. The door we [illegible] grace, because that is so suitable a name. [illegible] grace is the way God feels and acts toward [illegible] sinner now, not a thousand years hence; it is [illegible] attitude he has toward you; it is the way he is l[illegible] ing at you; it is the south wind of heaven carry[illegible] to you the fragrance of the love of him who[illegible] heaven's rose and lily.

The church and the world are enemies, and wil[illegible] even until the return of the Chief Pastor. [illegible] world is not to be won into submission to the M[illegible] High by our proclamation of the glad tidings. C[illegible] tain individuals who will turn from the love of [illegible] world to the love of the Father—these form [illegible] membership of the church of our Lord. When [illegible] Chief Shepherd appears, the door will be shut. Y[illegible] bring nearer the return of the Chief Pastor by [illegible] coming a Christian. I believe many an earnest p[illegible] tor would cut his vacation down one-half and retu[illegible] to his church, if he heard that fifty persons w[illegible] seeking membership in that church. Christian, y[illegible] hasten the time when the Chief Pastor shall appe[illegible] by every true member you add to the church. I[illegible] you desire assurance of eternal salvation? Th[illegible] ask yourself if you love the thought of his appea[illegible] ing and really long for him to come back. Do y[illegible] fear, because of the consciousness of what it wou[illegible] mean to you, if Christ came to his church now a[illegible] closed the door of salvation, and opened the door [illegible] judgment? Are you ready for the Chief Pastor [illegible] appear?

DAILY MEDITATION

FOR EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR

BY REV. J. H. JOWETT, D.D.

SUNDAY, August 10. I Peter 1: 13-21. "Redeemed not with corruptible things." That is one of our hardest lessons, to realize there are realms where corruptible things have no place. It is difficult to believe there are conditions where a sword is as powerless as a bubble. It is difficult to think there are iron gates that money cannot open. No money, no sword, no knowledge could effect the redemption of the soul. What can bribe a secret guilt? What can dry up the bitter marsh of remorse? What sword can slay the subtle germs of sin? What can buy a solvent to loosen paralyzed powers and set the prisoner free? What can purchase an illuminant which can change the soul's midnight into noon? "Redeemed with the precious blood of Christ." The power of the Saviour's death is the great antagonist of death. His death removes the deadly in our souls and becomes to us the gate of life. It took the most precious thing to remove the most repulsive thing. Only "the law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus" could free me "from the law of sin and death." We found our new life at the Cross. Our peace was born out of his pains. Our joys spring out of his sufferings. The light of our glorious hope rose from the gloom of his desolations. "God forbid that I should glory save in the cross of my Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ."

MONDAY, August 11. Exodus 13: 17; 14: 4. "The Lord went before them by day in a pillar of cloud." I need his leadership in the daytime. Sometimes the daylight is my foe. It tempts me into carelessness. I become the victim of distraction. The "garish day" can entice me into ways of trespass, and I am robbed of my spiritual health. Many a man has been faithful in the twilight and night who has lost himself in the sunshine. He went astray in his prosperity: success was his ruin. And so in the daytime I need the shadow of God's Presence, the cooling, subduing, calming influence of a friendly cloud. Beautiful it is on the sunny road to walk in "the shadow of the Almighty." "And by night in a pillar of fire." And I need God's leadership in the night. Sometimes the night fills me with fears and I am confused. The darkness chills me, sorrow and adversity make me cold, and I shiver along in uncertain going. But my God will lead me as a Presence of fire. He will keep my heart warm even in the midnight, and he will guide me by the kindlings of his love. There shall be "nothing hid from the heart thereof." My bewildering fears shall flee away. I will sing "songs in the night."

TUESDAY, August 12. Exodus 14: 5-14. "And he took six hundred chosen chariots, and all the chariots of Egypt." Thus did Pharaoh, and the forces seemed overwhelming. Israel would cower before them like a toad beneath the harrow. But there was just one omission in Pharaoh's estimate of his foes: he left out God! Israel might appear to be only as a crawling worm, but Israel was a worm in alliance with the Almighty! It was the invisible Ally who made the difference on the field. They say that Napoleon's presence among his troops was worth twenty thousand men. What must it be when the Lord of Hosts moves among his troops? Pharaoh had not counted God, and in his chariots he coursed to ruin.

And, therefore, let us not be unmanned when Pharaoh rides forth in his chariots. Let us not tremble when tyranny marshals her brutal hosts. Let us not be daunted when the drink traffic spends its gold in ranking its battalions against the army of reform. Let us not shrink when any unfair privilege gathers its chariots together for war against the common rights. "The Lord of Hosts is with us: the God of Jacob is our refuge."

And when that old Pharaoh, the devil, rides forth against my soul, to capture it and possess it, let me not lose my head in nervous fears. Only let me have the Saviour in my fort, and every assault will leave me unscathed. "The best of all is, God is with us."

WEDNESDAY, August 13. Exodus 14: 19-25. "And the angel of God . . . went behind them." The enemy was in the rear, and the angel stood between them and the foe. This ministry has a beautiful significance. For I, too, have foes behind me. There is the haunting sense of guilt, born in some far-away sin, and dogging my footsteps all along the way. There is the fear which springs from yesterday's mistake and failure, and which throws its shadow over the life of to-day. What can be done with these enemies in the rear?

There are two lines in a well-known martial hymn which I think only express half the truth:

With the cross of Jesus
Going on before!

That is gloriously true: but there is the complement of the truth that the cross of Jesus also comes on behind. The cross comes between me and my guilt. It comes between me and my sins. It shields me from the terrors of my yesterdays. It guards me from the assaults of "past years." This is the very grace of the Gospel of Christ. It can not only deal with the "maybe," it can also deal with the "has been." "Thou hast beset me before and behind."

And so we have the Angel guardianship in the very Presence of our Lord. In our pilgrimage from Egypt to Canaan he will defend us from that foe in our rear.

THURSDAY, August 14. Exodus 14: 24-31. "The Egyptians said, Let us flee from the face of Israel, for their Lord fighteth for them." When our God is really manifest in us the enemy will assuredly tremble and flee. It is when there is nothing divine about us that we become the easy prey of the devil. A church that has nothing awful and awe-inspiring in its life counts for nothing. A minister who carries about no savour of the eternal Presence will do no wonders. A teacher who is not the dwelling-place of the Lord will put no enemy to flight. The only person the devil is afraid of is God. Any combination which leaves him out will be as stubble before a fire.

Well, the enemy is very blustering in our own day. He strides about with a very swaggering air. Is he afraid of the church? Does he shake when she prays? Does he take to flight when she sings her processional hymns? Or does he often see that there is nothing in it, that we are only playing at religion, that we are only using painted fire? Does he see only us, or God in us? We become mighty as soon as we begin to entertain God. The devil's day is over when we make a friend of Christ.

FRIDAY, August 15. Exodus 15: 1-13. "Thou didst blow with thy wind, and the sea covered them." We are so prone to forget this destructive wind of the Lord. "The grass withered because the breath of the Lord blowed upon it." The breath that is the minister of life can also be the minister of death. The fact of the matter is, we cannot get away from this breath of God, and it is either our friend or our foe. In the city of Birmingham an iron building has a very short life because the atmosphere eats it away. And so it is with man: a life may seem to have the stability of iron, yet if it be constituted of iniquity, the breath of the Lord is consuming it away.

Thus it is that God's destructives are not always in the form of great winds and tempests. Sometimes they are as subtle as gentle breezes. Everything that is unlike God is being destroyed by the atmosphere of God.

But there is the golden side to this gloom. The air of God nourishes everything that is like God. The faintest desire after holiness is in a friendly atmosphere. The weakest impulse is in congenial air. He is continually breathing upon his people the vitalizing breath of the Holy Ghost.

O breath of God, breathe on us now,
And move within us while we pray.

SATURDAY, August 16. Psalm 77: 11-20. "Thy way is in the sea." And the sea appears to be the most trackless of worlds! The sea is the very symbol of mystery, the grim dwelling-house of innumerable things that have been lost. But God's way moves here and there across this trackless wild. God is never lost among our mysteries. He knows his way about. When we are bewildered he sees the road, and he sees the end even from the beginning. Even the sea is the Lord's highway.

When his way is in the sea we cannot track it. Mystery is part of our appointed discipline. Uncertainty is to prepare us for a deeper assurance. The spirit of questioning is one of the ordained means of growth. And so the bewildering sea is our friend, as some day we shall understand. We love to "lie down in green pastures," and to be led "beside the still waters," and God gives us our share of this nourishing rest. But we need the mysterious sea, the overwhelming floods of sorrows which we cannot explain. If we had no sea we should remain weaklings to the end of our days.

God takes us out into the deeps. But his way is in the sea. He knows the haven, he knows the track, and we shall arrive!

TOPICS OF INTEREST AT HOME AND ABROAD

A RECENT CABLE DESPATCH on the progress of Italy's conquest and occupation of the territory in North Africa, which she acquired from Turkey states that what was probably the most important battle which will be fought in Cyrenaica took place recently between the Italians and the Arabs at Mudar, which was occupied by the Italian troops. Thirty Italians were wounded. They defeated two thousand Egyptian Arabs with machine guns and quantities of stores, which were captured by the Italians. This movement will cut off the supplies of contraband received by the Arabs from Egypt.

SECRETARY OF STATE BRYAN has wisely "accepted the situation," as we believed he would, and has canceled several of his lecture engagements in order to give more time to consideration of the Mexican question. If necessary, he will cancel all his "speaking dates" on his list. "I do not object to people objecting to my lecturing," he is reported as remarking. "I have found in my experience that people will find fault, no matter what a man does, whether it is good or bad." Under all circumstances, however, he recognizes that there was reason in their fault-finding in the present instance; but since he has adopted the popular view, it is only fair that he should now cease to be a subject of criticism. After all, there are richer and more enduring laurels to be won in international diplomacy than in the lecture field.

—AT TEN O'CLOCK on the morning of July 19 the Grenfell mission schooner, George B. Cluett, swung into the stream and sailed from Boston on her voyage to Labrador. The little mission ship carried the greatest number of passengers she has ever taken north, in addition to the winter supply of coal, oil, medicine, hospital supplies, clothing and provisions. Dr. John Mason Little, accompanied by his wife, his son—the "Snow Baby" as he is called,—and Miss Louise Little, his sister, is returning to Labrador on the George B. Cluett. Others on board are Caroline Willey, professional nurse from Hartford, Conn., who will go to southern Labrador; Dr. Stephen Mallet of the Harvard Dental School, who is to practice dentistry at St. Anthony's; Joseph Cockrane, a Williams College student, Philip Dotty, a New York shipping clerk who was formerly in the quartermaster's department in the United States navy in the Philippines, and Harry Alexander and Howard S. Brasted of New York, both students at the College of Physicians and Surgeons.

—ONE PERSON WAS killed and several others seriously wounded in encounters between revolutionists and the police and soldiers in Lisbon, Portugal, on July 20. The trouble started when the suspicions of the police were aroused by the movements of an automobile which carried no lights. They stopped the car and arrested the two passengers. Each passenger had two bombs in his possession and there was a basketful of bombs in the automobile. The police were taking their prisoners to the station house when they were attacked by a mob. Two bombs were thrown at the officers. One policeman was killed and the driver of the automobile and another policeman were wounded. At the same time fighting began elsewhere between mobs and the police. A crowd endeavored to rush the barracks of the sailors, but were driven back and dispersed. Three persons who were in a mob which tried to enter the post of the Republican Guard were shot and seriously wounded while resisting the soldiers. A little later a soldier, who was driving an automobile through the principal street, was ordered to stop by a crowd. The soldier refused to obey and the mob fired. One occupant of the car was seriously wounded. Men found carrying bombs in various other quarters of the city were arrested. The revolt was finally put down.

MEDIATING RAILWAY DIFFICULTIES

THE gravity of the threatened strike of 100,000 trainmen and railway conductors on the Eastern railway systems of America, which led to such prompt action on the part of the President and Congress, continues to engage public attention up to the date of the preparation of this issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for the presses. From Washington, D. C., where the accompanying photograph of a number of the railway presidents and the leaders of the disaffected employees was taken, the scene has changed to New York. Acting under the new railroad wage arbitration law, President Wilson nominated to the court of labor mediation commissioner, William Lea Chambers, a lawyer of Washington, D. C.; assistant commissioner, Glassbrenner Wallace William Hanger, of Washington, D. C., chief statistician of the Bureau of Labor Statistics; members, Louis Freeland Post, of Chicago, assistant secretary of labor; Martin A. Knapp, chief justice of the Commerce Court. The appointment of Mr. Hanger as assistant commissioner means that he will relinquish his place in the Bureau of Labor Statistics.

THE ACTIVE MEMBERS OF THE NEW LABOR COURT

JUDGE MARTIN A. KNAPP JUDGE WM. L. CHAMBERS ASST. COMMISSIONER G. W. W. HANGER

The new commisioner of mediation, Mr. Chambers, is well known in Washington. He is a Southern man who was once president of the company which founded Sheffield, Ala., now the second city of the South in iron production. He was the American member of the commission named under the Berlin Treaty of 1890 between England, Germany, and the United States. From 1897 to 1901 he was chief justice of the International Court of Samoa, and from 1901 until 1910 he was a member of the Spanish Treaty Claims Commission.

Mr. Post, who has been assistant secretary of labor since its creation in March, comes from Chicago, where he has been editor of The Public. He began as a printer, was assistant United States attorney in New York, became interested in Henry George and his teachings, and ran for Congress on the labor ticket in 1883. He has been an editor in Cleveland and Chicago, and lectured on single tax and political and electoral reform.

Judge Knapp, the other member of the new board, is a New Yorker, and was for many years chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission. In 1910 he was appointed by President Taft as an additional United States Circuit judge and assigned as chief judge of the United States Commerce Court. As chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission he served as a mediator under the old Erdman Railroad Arbitration Act, and on his retirement from the commission he was designated by President Taft to continue to serve under that act.

Mr. Post's active participation in the settlement of the present trouble having been postponed, the other three gentlemen immediately took up their new duties in New York, where the Order of Railway Conductors and the Brotherhood of Railroad Firemen, as well as the representatives of the railway management have their headquarters. Before the close of the first day's s of the court, its members had come to realize that they must abandon a of settling the difficulties by mediation and that the most they could l do would be to bring the disputants close enough together to admit of a tion. It had been anticipated that this first task of the mediators wou brief one, but it soon became evident that the process of adjustmer likely to be long draw with both sides yielding and grudgingly. The in of the grievances form for publication by the Co tee of Railroad Manager the dispute has greatly plicated matters. Afte managers had outlined position and expressed desire to incorporate claims into the articles bitration, the commissi heard the views of the representatives, Messrs. and Garretson. The Bro hood chiefs refused flatl enter into any negotia leading to arbitration in w the claims of the rail would be considered.

It seemed for a few h that the refusal of the Railway to join in or be in way represented in the cor ences would be a cause of sension. A number of bas stories were told and retol the financial district in York, but the facts seem to indicate that Erie had very little fear of a strike. Mr. don Craig, assistant general passenger tr agent, said in this connection: "Oh, they d worry us much. They could only get a sn proportion of our men on a strike order, an guess we'd still manage to pull a few trains and out."

It was generally recognized that the broth hoods would not relish a strike on the Erie alo It would be far easier to break such a stri and a failure to bring it to a triumphant conc sion would be fine capital for the managers' in future wage controversies. It is even mitted privately from within the brotherh ranks that no strike order would bring all men out of the Erie, and the conductors, es cially those serving on the passenger trai were suspected of being just about as loyal the Erie as to the order.

THE RAILWAY PRESIDENTS AND EMPLOYEES' REPRESENTATIVES AFTER THE WHITE HOUSE CONFERENCE

The agreement of the railway to enter into the negotiations removed th snag, however, and the mediators immediately began work on the larger pro lems. Both the railways and the members of the court are anxious to conclu the business as soon as possible, and the brotherhoods will not encourage a delay, for the negotiations are costing them a handsome sum. It was est mated on July 21 that they had had to pay out at least $90,000 since the first July. But they are engaged in a game which has as its stakes a sum in seve figures.

Judge Chambers, at the end of the last reported session, employed his fav rite comment in summing up the prospects for peace. "Hopeful," he said.

SHALL BANANAS PAY A TAX?

THE plan of the framers of the new tariff law to levy a tax upon the familiar banana has unexpectedly stirred up a vigorous protest from all classes of consumers. In several cities mass meetings have been held to protest against the new law, and in every section of the country the discussion is active. The agitation has served to draw attention to the remarkable organization of the business of transporting bananas. In the arguments against placing any tariff on bananas which would tend to raise the price of the fruit, it is pointed out that bananas are the most common and popular of all luxuries among fruit products. No other kind of fruit is so often found in the workingman's dinner pail or on the table of well-to-do people. The gathering and transportation of bananas presents unusual difficulties. The fruit is exceedingly perishable and must be picked while green, and rushed thousands of miles to the consumer in the few days which will elapse before it ripens. A delay of a few hours may make it necessary to throw overboard a large cargo at sea. Yet so carefully has this business of transportation been organized that millions of bananas are brought from the distant tropics and sold so cheaply as to be within the reach of all.

The great part of the banana crop is raised on the shores and islands of the Caribbean Sea. Throughout the West Indies, Central America and the northern shores of South America are to be found countless banana plantations, highly cultivated, covering thousands of acres. The moment the bunches of bananas have been severed from the trees every effort is made to rush the fruit to market with the least possible delay.

The great fleet of fruit steamers which bring us our banana supply are equipped with the latest form of refrigerating plants Here the bananas are stored in great vaults, where an even temperature i maintained day and night throughout the voyage. A single fruit vessel wil carry from thirty thousand to fifty thousand bunches, so that the cooling room must naturally be large. As a rule, a special officer is placed in charge of the cooling machinery, and it i his sole duty to watch the thermometer and keep the banana holds at the right temperature throughout the voyage.

A TYPICAL BANANA GROVE IN JAMAICA

As an additional precaution several high-powered wireless telegraph stations have been installed about the Caribbean Sea to stand guard over these valuable cargoes. Every fruit vessel, in turn, has its wireless plant, so that the fruit is never out of touch with land In the old days before wireless telegraphy, many a valuable cargo of bananas was lost through delay at sea. To-day, if a fruit steamer be delayed from any cause, a wireless call is quickly sent out for help. The operators in the great wireless stations are constantly alert, on the lookout for such calls, and a few minutes later the owners of the ship in New Orleans, or Baltimore, or New York are notified of the danger. Assistance is rushed to the disabled steamer, and the cargo is expedited in every way. All these preparations are made to save a day, or, perhaps, a few hours of valuable time in bringing the bananas to port. Once arrived, they are rushed upon railroad trains to be hurried to their destination.

In the course of a year about 40,000,000 bunches of bananas were imported; in other words, some 2,500,000,000 bananas. This makes an average of about twenty-five for every man, woman and child in the country.

A WEEK IN THE WORLD'S NEWS

M the Washington bureau of one of the great daily newspapers comes following statement of the international situation arising from the day in the Senate of the arbitration treaties: "Informal inquiries by the presentative of a first-class European Power indicate that trouble will intered by the present administration if the Senate does not soon take n the way of ratifying the arbitration treaties which have been renewed by the State Department. There are now seven treaties before the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations and three before the Senate itself. Since opposition was encountered to the general treaty of arbitration with Great Britain no attempt has been made by the Democratic leaders to secure the ratification of the treaties which remain enate calendar or in the files of the Foreign Relations Committee. Nor attempt been made by the State Department or administrative officials e the Senate to act.

Indignant ration

ly before the close of the last administration the Senate ratified the ion treaty with France, the first of the score or more negotiated by ry Root to expire. The Italian government, unable to understand why ty with France should have been renewed and its own treaty held up apparent cause, is seeking light on the situation. Great Britain, Japan other nations, the representatives of which have agreed with Secreyan to the renewal of the treaties for another period of five years, are at a loss to understand why any distinction should have been drawn France and themselves, and diplomatic inquiries have already been clear away the apparent mystery.

TAILS regarding the extension, improvement and reduction in rates of he parcel post were announced on July 20 by Postmaster General Burleson. The changes, which are to become effective August 15, include an increase from eleven pounds to twenty pounds in the maximum of parcels; a material reduction in the postage rates in the first and zones, and the abandonment of the parcel post map as a means of computing rates, and the substitution for it of a rate chart individualized to every postoffice in the United States.

The postmaster-general believes the increase in the weight limit and the reduction of the rates of postage in the first and second zones, as proposed, will benefit greatly more than one-third of the public. He says that farmers afforded a cheap means of transporting their products directly to the er, and that the local merchant whose trade does not justify the emnt of extensive delivery service also will be benefited.

BANQUET on the evening of July 21 brought to a close the sessions of the International Congress on Religious Progress, which had for several days been going on in Paris, France. The congress was attended by many leaders in all varieties of religious thought, there being Protes- Catholics, Jews, Unitarians, Ethical Culturalists, New Thought, and l European so-called modernist sects represented. Pastor Charles Wagner, author of The Simple Life, presided at the closing banquet. Among the American speakers on that occasion were the Rev. Samuel A. Eliot, president of the American Unitarian Association, and the Rev. Dr. Stephen S. Wise, rabbi of the Free Synagogue of New York. Although a majority of the members of the congress held that the ishment of a universal religion was not necessary, it was the unanimous n that the present congress was a step toward religious unity. A feaf the congress was a debate on the subject; "Is a universal religion posor desirable? If so, how can it be attained?"

FACTORY fire, in which the loss of life was almost as appalling as in the now famous Triangle fire in New York City, took place in Binghamton, N. Y., on the afternoon of July 22. The factory of the Binghamton Clothing Company was destroyed by a fire that did its awful work in y minutes, destroying the four-story brick building, damaging several y structures, and burying the remains of its victims beneath masses of ruins. Many were burned to death, others were killed by jumping from the upper floors, and still others have died or are so seriously injured that death is expected in the hospital. Most of the victims of the disaster were women and girls, who ran sewing-machines on the upper floors of the factory building. Tardy response to a fire alarm conted very largely to the loss of life. The employers said recent familiarity ire drills had led the workers to become almost indifferent to alarms from stem installed two months before in obedience to the State authorities.

e factory fire was more like an explosion than an ordinary blaze. It on the persons in the structure, estimated to number 125 or more, with uddenness and fury of a giant bomb. How many of them could have ed if they had lost no time in heeding the alarm must remain guesswork. ames swirled up the stairs and through the factory so rapidly that it was ed by many men experienced in such disasters that only a few of the ns could have got out by using the utmost diligence. At any rate, with omen and girls taking their time, in the belief that it was only another rill, what margin of safety there might have been was wiped out. The that the sounding of gongs on the various floors was merely a test was al.

furious was the fire ten minutes after its start, which is supposed to have red under a staircase on one of the lower floors, that the firemen, who at were on the spot, were of little use, except to help the injured strewing round after their jumps from high windows, or to aid in the recovery of s that had fallen far enough from the building to be accessible. Even work could be done only in dashes. The bravest had to wait for momenshifts of the wind to get within 200 feet of the factory. None of them stand the heat more than a few seconds at a time. Firemen and policewatched their chances, sped as close to the scorching structure as they , snatched up the dead or dying, and rushed back to the cooler zone.

er the first fierce blast, the fire seemed to burst from every part of the ng at once. On the fire-escapes girls, women, and men were clustered, nside others still were waiting to get on the iron ladders. But the flames too quick for them. The fire escapes were not big enough to hold all who d to those exits, and there was a dash for the windows, the girls screams the flames swept on them from behind and seared their bodies. Then windows and fire escapes the bodies began dropping. They fell thick ast. As the building was only four stories high, many who jumped even from the topmost floor escaped with their lives, although most of them were badly maimed. Since it was on the fourth floor that most of the operatives were working, it was there the loss of life and the injuries were greatest.

Coroner Seymour of Whitney Point, acting in the absence of Coroner Wilson of Binghamton, gave the police strict instructions to permit no interference with any possible evidence, and he will hold a thorough inquest into the cause of the loss of life. Friends of the victims declared the fire escapes were inadequate, and the stairs too narrow. They asserted the death toll could have been avoided, or at least kept smaller, if those defects had been remedied.

ALL the despatches bearing on the progress of the work on the Panama Canal indicate that the plans and expectations of the engineers are to be successfully fulfilled. A few weeks ago the announcement was made that Gamboa Dike will be dynamited on October 10. Although it had been announced that this dynamiting would take place after October 1, this is the first time the actual date has been named. The destruction of the dike will permit Gatun Lake to flood the cut, thereby practically connecting the Atlantic and Pacific, although actual navigation of the canal probably will not be attempted for some time thereafter. Excavation in the cut henceforth will be confined mainly to removing the remaining hard rock sections between Cucaracha Slide and Empire, a distance of a mile. An advice from Panama, dated July 18, says: "The closing of the public offices at Gorgona, a town on the Panama Canal, which soon will be inundated by the rising of waters of Gatun Lake, began to-day with the abandonment of the police station. The town will be vacated by all its inhabitants as quickly as possible after August 1. Gorgona is twenty miles northwest of the City of Panama at the head of the Chagres River. The water in Gatun Lake has risen three feet since the spillway gates were closed, June 27."

Getting Ready for Business at Panama

Secretary Daniels, in a recent interview, announced it as his purpose to stand on the bridge of the old battleship Oregon and lead the entire battleship fleet of the United States through the Panama Canal, and thence up the Pacific Coast. The voyage would be made, he said as soon as Colonel Goethals gave the word that the fleet could steam through the waterway. He added that while the plan to have the Oregon lead the procession was only tentative, it was his earnest desire that the old war craft should show the way for the American armada, and that the Navy Department would attempt to carry out this idea.

A NOTABLE will was filed for probate on July 23. It was that of Rev. Leander Trowbridge Chamberlain, a noted theologian and formerly assistant paymaster of the United States Navy, who died in California on May 9. Specific legacies to the amount of $165,000 were left to various institutions, the chief beneficiary being the Thessalonica Agricultural and Industrial Institute at Salonika, Turkey. Dr. Chamberlain's fortune was inherited from his wife, Mrs. Frances Lea Chamberlain, daughter of Isaac Lea, the scientist. As an explanation of his disposition of the property, in which only one of his personal relatives was given a share, Dr. Chamberlain made this statement at the end of his will:

Dr. Leander T. Chamberlain's Will

"In thus disposing of my property I have taken into consideration the fact that it was altogether inherited from my beloved wife, and that, accordingly, equity dictates that the disposition, with a single exception, should be in behalf of those objects which were of special interest to her and those connected with the perpetuation and honoring of her memory and that of her noble father."

The bequest to the Thessalonica Institute was made, Dr. Chamberlain stated, because he believed it was destined in time to become a "commanding force of Christian influence in all that part of the near Orient." The sum of $35,000 was left to the Smithsonian Institute, with which Mrs. Chamberlain's father was connected for many years. The Holiday Home of the Holy Church of the Trinity, Philadelphia, received $20,000 in order that "the needy and weary of the parish might have a summer rest." A "Frances Lea Chamberlain" bed was established in the Protestant Episcopal Hospital, Philadelphia, by the gift of $5,000, and a like sum was bequeathed to the Academy of National Science in Philadelphia.

A NEW policy toward Nicaragua, virtually involving control of the affairs of that republic by the United States through a protectorate similar to that now exercised over Cuba, has been established by Secretary of State Bryan. In the revised draft of the Nicaraguan treaty, a section similar to the so-called "Platt amendment" to our treaty with Cuba has been introduced. This arranges that in exchange for protection and financial assistance Nicaragua shall accept the following conditions:

The U. S. Assumes a Protectorate Over Nicaragua

That war should not be declared without the consent of the United States.

That no treaties would be made with foreign governments that would tend to destroy her independence, or that would give those governments a foothold in the republic.

That no public debt would be contracted beyond the ordinary resources of the government, as indicated by the ordinary revenues.

That the United States should have the right to intervene at any time to preserve Nicaraguan independence, or to protect life or property.

That the United States should have the exclusive right to build a canal across Nicaragua, and should have a ninety-nine-year lease to a naval base in the Bay of Fonseca and to the Great Corn and Little Corn Islands in the Caribbean, with the privilege of renewing the lease.

According to what is said by Central Americans in Washington, the objection to the Nicaraguan treaty is that it will serve to prevent the formation of the proposed federation of the Isthmian republics that has been the dream of leading politicians in that part of the world for many years. Since the fact became known in Central America that Nicaragua was negotiating a treaty with the United States that, among other things, would give to this government the right to establish a naval base in Nicaragua on the Bay of Fonseca, adjacent to the territory of Salvador and Honduras, the cry has gone up that the "American invasion has begun."

AN AMERICAN courier, almost dropping from exhaustion, staggered into El Paso, Texas, on July 23 with news that a little band of Americans, including ten women and six children, were besieged at Madera in the State of Chihuahua by Mexican bandits, and that, even when the messenger left there fourteen days ago, they were on the verge of starvation. For a week before the messenger stole away from the camp to seek help, the Americans, mostly employes of the $5,000,000 lumber plant at Madera owned by the Pearsons, an English syndicate, had been holding off the bandits, who are neither Federals nor rebels, but straightaway outlaws in all the name implies. What has happened since the courier left can only be imagined. The bandits threatened to slaughter the men, carry away the women, and burn the lumber plant.

Mexican Bandits Threaten Americans

OUR EDITORIAL FORUM

PRESIDENT OTTO KOENIG | MANAGING EDITOR GEO. H. SANDISON | SECRETARY THEODORE WATERS

The Mexican Situation

MEXICO has long been a noted disturber of the peace of this continent, but while her revolutions and insurrections involved no other interests than her own, there was no legitimate cause for outside interference. This is no longer the case, however. The lives and property of American and of foreign residents generally are at the present moment wholly unprotected. A number have already become victims of the lawless bands of troops; others are held for ransom by bandits, and much valuable property, belonging to subjects of our own and other governments, has been destroyed. There is not even a pretense of protection by the Huerta administration. Our government has been patient and forbearing—perhaps too long—but a point has now been reached where further tolerance ceases to be a virtue and the adoption of a firm and definite policy becomes an imperative duty. We owe it to other Powers no less than to ourselves to take such action as will conduce to the effective safeguarding of American and foreign lives and interests in the disturbed republic.

This does not necessarily involve active intervention, which is only to be considered as a last resort. Overtures of co-operation from any other Power, however friendly, we cannot seriously consider. Acceptance of such an offer would mark a radical departure from long-established precedent. It remains for us alone to take up the task, if not of pacification, at least of safeguarding the interests committed to our care. And the wisest and most effective means of doing this is now under advisement in Washington.

In the Senate, the introduction by Mr. Fall of New Mexico, of a resolution in general terms declaring it to be a national policy to protect American citizens in foreign countries, gave an opportunity for the display of some jingo sentiment; but calmer counsels prevailed, and it went over for the time being. While the general tone of the debate was condemnatory of the prolonged administrative inaction, the situation was not viewed as one that called for serious alarm or which would justify indiscreet speeches that are liable to misinterpretation. Matters have not yet reached the point where the resources of diplomacy have been exhausted. The Cabinet and the Foreign Relations Committees of both Houses may decide that the exercise of the authority vested in the President by Congress on March 14, 1912, to prohibit the exportation of munitions of war from this country to the Huerta government, would satisfactorily meet the emergency. The Taft administration shut off the supply to the revolutionists. Thus both sides being equally subject to the embargo on war material, the struggle would necessarily be soon ended. Mediation, too, may be considered, to the extent of reaching such an understanding with Mexico that a special election could be held, affording the people a free choice for president. This would pave the way for American recognition of the newly-elected regime and would greatly expedite the work of pacification, and the restoration of law and order.

What of China's Future?

IT IS somewhat mystifying, after noting the progress China has made during her short experience as a republic, to try to understand why she should now be in the throes of a second revolution. What may be the key to the Chinese puzzle is supplied in an article contributed to The Advance by David Z. T. Yui, an educated Chinese, who was head of the Department o. Foreign Affairs for some time. He declares frankly that the people of his nation are dissatisfied with the results of the first revolution, and he is glad of it. It has been "a mere change in the form of government." He says further:

"At bottom such a mere change of form does not and can not satisfy any people who seek to build a great republic. This second revolution will far exceed the first revolution in extent, in thoroughness, in intensity, and in duration. . . . The second revolution is what we call in China 'The Revolution of the Heart.' The Chinese people thoroughly believe that the only permanent basis for a republican form of government is the moral character of the people. For this reason their attitude toward the Christian religion is most favorable. . . . The 'Sick Man' of the Far East is now recuperating. The 'Giant' is fully awakened. The students to-day no longer squander their intellectual power upon the intricacies of the so-called 'eighth legate essay.' They are now acquiring all kinds of knowledge. The whole Chinese nation is moving at a tremendous speed. The 400,000,000 people of China whose intellectual power, physical stamina, moral fibre, business honesty, patience and endurance compare most favorably with those of any other people in the world, and whose natural resources are unlimited, are moving to-day, but whither? It is absolutely true for me to say that China to-day looks up to Christendom for guidance and co-operation."

If the present movement in China be indeed such as Mr. Yui describes, who can tell whether we may not yet witness the wondrous event of a nation born in a day. The Chinese have already shown that they do nothing by halves. What a transformation it would be were the oldest of nations to sweep away its idols and its ancient religions forever and step out in view of the whole world under the banner of Christ! It would be the miracle of the centuries.

Pastor Sheldon and the Confessional

Frankfort, Mich., July 21, 1913.

Editor, "The Christian Herald":

I find on my return from California your letter of July 16. This is my first opportunity to answer it. I nced hardly say to you that the papers persistently, and it seemed to me, wilfully garbled and misquoted me in what I said about a "Protestant confessional." All I meant by the term was a regular opportunity offered by the pastor to his people to confide in him and pour out their troubles, in order to secure the help of such close personal friendship. The last thing in the world I advocated was a confessional like the Roman Catholic. I said so repeatedly, and defined again and again what I meant. But in spite of everything, I was misquoted and misinterpreted. A representative of the Associated Press in Los Angeles assured me that the story started through a yellow press reporter, and that the Associated Press would not send out any such misstatement.

Very cordially yours,

CHARLES M. SHELDON.

The Binghamton Horror

IS THERE no hope that we shall come to an end of these heart-breaking sacrifices of human life in factory fires?

Only one thing will stop it. That is, only one thing will stop it until society is reorganized on a more righteous and reasonable basis than the present plan of greedy competition for g[illegible] thing is the actual and vigorous puni[illegible] those who are to blame for each disast[illegible] and again it is the old story. There is [illegible] tion, agitation, resolution—but no one is [illegible] So the thing happens again.

Sometimes our humorists are sound tea[illegible] trustworthy prophets. On the day foll[illegible] Binghamton disaster, Franklin P. For the cost of living rises high, but the cost of life [illegible]

In the present instance it does not settle a[illegible] to say that the girls were slow in respondi[illegible] to [illegible] fire alarm. Somebody else was to blame. [illegible] be found. He must be punished.

Meanwhile, affairs in New York State re[illegible] chaotic condition. The Legislature must be whipped into [illegible] and adequate action. Politicians and [illegible] makers cannot continue thus to trifle with [illegible] life. The city of Binghamton must find o[illegible] was at fault in this particular fatality, an[illegible] they must be sent to jail.

But in the midst of our anger and grie[illegible] praise—praise for brave "Mother" Mollie C[illegible] and Sidney Dimmick, forewoman and forema[illegible] died that others might be saved!

Milder Judgment on Bulgaria

IT HAS been exceedingly difficult to lea[illegible] actual conditions in Bulgaria. Ipswich Strikers Are Roofless

T FIRST fourteen families of operatives on strike at the Ipswich Hosiery Mills slept in the streets, guarding their household goods, following evictions from tenements l by the company, and the number has increased l, n July 18, it was said there are ninety-five es who cook and eat their meals in the open, in the streets, some in their beds, others curled their rugs, on carpets, or the bare ground, or airs. The mill workers were warned when went on strike four months ago that they l be dispossessed of their homes if they re- to return to work. The men made no forcible ance to the officers when they put their plain hold goods out into the street. This is a tic picture, enough to make a city and a na- blush for shame and then cry for sorrow. the houses belonged to the company, and the ers had no legal right to occupy them as they no longer operatives, he tenements were built uch. The strikers had months' warning, one- l of a year; that seems er than the average lord would bear with a quent, and in a certain e they evicted themselves. there is another side to question. The men claim their wages were so low o keep them down to the edge of an animal sup- , and that rather than t themselves to a barren ness proposition, so de- of hope for the future, would go out and trust charity of the streets. tunately, the working ple of this country, mil- s of them, own their own es. This is one of the sts and treasures of our ional life. Some of the r children of our Lord out the streets have recalled words of Jesus:

e foxes have holes, and the birds he air have nests; but the Son nan hath not where to lay his l. (Matt. 8: 20.)

The Seals Protest

HAT the Antartic sea animals object seriously to ing their pictures taken is gested by the manner in ich they tried to kill H. G. ting, the photographer of the ill-fated Scott edition, when he attempted to take views of them his cinematographic records. In a current pub- tion the artist gives two incidents of narrow apes from sea animals. "When endeavoring to uce a seal weighing perhaps a half ton to pose a picture, it suddenly evinced the most deter- ed objections to the proceedings, and lunging at it seized hold of my leg, throwing me down. teeth went through all of my clothes and drew od, but I was not hurt, owing to the fact that I . This, I believe, is the only instance on record a Weddell seal ever having bitten a man." the many marvelous inventions of the age, seem more so than the cinematograph, ich pictures the wild beast on the veldt, or sneak- through the jungle, or crawling over the ice. e animals of the deep came to the earth first for od created . . . every living creature that moveth, which waters brought forth abundantly, after their kind. Steals Purse at Communion

OBBED of her purse while she was at the com- munion rail in an important church in Brook- recently, a woman gave a quiet alarm, and a en of the worshipers rushed to the street in pur- t of the one suspected. The young lady had t a sum of money in her purse in the pew when went to the altar. Returning, she found it e, and a woman seated near said a man had en it. Detectives Craig and Asip, after a run several blocks, arrested the man suspected, and purse was found in a gutter near by where the man was arrested. He was held in $1,000 bail. It is a great misfortune and shame that, despite so many true Christians, there are some who profess to be such and worship in God's house, who plan their pilferings, and do not hesitate to take unjustly from their neighbors. No more blistering words fell from the lips of the Master than those uttered against the dishonest hypocrites in the church:

Woe unto you, Scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye devour widows' houses, and for a pretense make long prayer: therefore ye shall receive the greater damnation. (Matt. 23: 14.)

A Long Walk to College

THREE Porto Rican students left New York the other day to walk to Chicago and then to Champaign, Ill. There they will enter the University of Illinois. José B. Becerra will enter the university as a junior; Juan H. Font as a sophomore; and Victoreano Pagan as a freshman. Victoreano is a stranger in the United States, but the other two are quite American. Señor Becerra has spent two years in New York as a student at the College of Dental and Oral Surgery. Señor Font has finished his freshman year at the College of Physicians and Surgeons in Baltimore. In their knapsacks the young men will carry a tent, bedding, and a few cooking utensils for emergencies. They expect to make thirty miles a day, reaching Chicago in a month. In every city along the route, they will try to get the autograph of the mayor and secretary of the Young Men's Christian Association. These young men realize the value of the words of Solomon:

Get wisdom, get understanding. (Prov. 4: 5.)

Millionaire Adopts 300 Children

EVERY poor child in Tulsa, Okla., is singing the praises of Charles Page, a local millionaire, through whose generosity they are privileged to enjoy a daily outing during the hot summer months, and who has adopted into a home he has founded 300 poor children, and hopes to increase the number to a thousand. Near the village of Sand Springs, a suburb of Tulsa, Mr. Page owns six thousand acres. He has converted eighty acres of the forest into one of the most complete parks in America, particular attention being paid to a playground for children. An interurban railroad owned by Mr. Page connects the village and park with the city. Every morning a special car takes every child who cares to go to the park and brings them back to town in the evening free of charge. The larger boys in the permanent home on the estate work on the farm in the summer. The larger girls work a number of hours each day during the fruit season, canning fruit for the home. Mr. Page says that he intends to devote nearly all of his five million dollars to the perpetuation by endowment of his children's home, which is to shelter, support, and educate a thousand children of the poor. What a blessed charity. Now and in the centuries to come, he will hear these words of the divine Master:

Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me. (Matt. 25: 40.)

Died Without Receiving a Pardon

CARDENIO F. KING, a stockbroker and newspaper publisher of Boston, was sent to prison for a term of from ten to fourteen years upon a conviction of the larceny of $25,338 from his customers. He was confined in the prison at Charlestown for some time when his health became so poor he was removed to the hospital in Bridgewater at the State Farm, at which place he died the other day. His wife enlisted the aid of influential men to secure a pardon for him before he died. As he was hanging between life and death, a telephone call from Boston informed him that all but two of Governor Foss's council had agreed to his pardon, but that the attorney-general had ruled that such a pardon over the phone was illegal, and the council would meet the next morning and sign the pardon and have it transmitted to him immediately. King was greatly elated at the idea of dying a free man and not a convict, and tried hard to live till the next morning, but he could not. He sank down in the afternoon and passed away inside prison walls under a convict's shadow. We are often so liberal in our theology that we forget the doctrine of sin and pardon and of redemption by Christ, and overlook the fact that whatever pardon is to be secured for the sinner who has broken God's royal law of love must be obtained before death. There are no such difficulties in securing divine pardon as those encountered by the Boston prisoner, but there is required as a condition a change in life and of thought, which is thus expressed by the prophet:

Let the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts: and let him return unto the Lord, and he will have mercy upon him; and to our God, for he will abundantly pardon. (Isa. 55: 7.)

Racer's Headgear Proves Fatal

THE other night H. C. Warner, of New York City, a motorcycle racer, blinded by a loose headgear, shot off the track of the Motordrome in Pittsburg and was killed, his skull being fractured. He was only twenty-five years old, and was the racing partner of Arthur Chappelle, world's champion motorcyclist. In the first race of the evening, in the fifth lap of the first half, he was driving faster than a mile a minute, and was a half lap behind Herbert Ayrault, the French racer of Newark, N. J., and William Norton, of Cleveland, when his headgear became unfastened and slipped over his eyes. Blinded, he careened off the oblique track and crashed into the screen protecting the spectators and against a heavy post, breaking his skull. Four thousand people saw the fatal accident. In the mental and spiritual realm racers are subjected to many dangers, in the slipping of the headgear or entanglements or encumbrances of one kind or another. The apostle suggests caution against such handicaps:

Let us lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us, and let us run with patience the race that is set before us. (Heb. 12: 1.)

THE SUMMER AT OCEAN GRO

THE beautiful Atlantic laps the shores of Ocean Grove, bringing health and refreshment, suggesting the boundless love of God and the wideness of his mercy. Here the words of the old hymn are better understood, for side by side with the limitless grandeur of the sea are the manifestations of God's glory in the songs and sermons, the Bible study and the testimonies of the old camp meeting ground:

There's a wideness in God's mercy
Like the wideness of the sea.

DONALD CHALMERS CHARLES H. YATMAN LYNN HAROLD HOUGH

The Ocean Grove season of 1913 opened on the 15th of June, when Bishop Berry preached to a large audience in the auditorium. The Holiness meeting, again in charge of Dr. and Mrs. Henry Wheeler, began its regular nine o'clock sessions on that day. During the ten days' camp-meeting later in the summer Bishop Wilson will give a daily Bible reading at this meeting.

The services of the Young People's meeting began on June 17, under the continued leadership of Dr. Charles L. Mead of Baltimore. Donald Chalmers, the auditorium basso, leads the music in the Young People's Temple, assisted by the Aida Trumpeters and Mrs. Ballard Lewis, soloist. Miss Gertrude Helen Rumsey, assisted by Miss Harris, is again in charge of the twilight service. Every Sabbath afternoon two beach meetings are held at four o'clock, one at the north pavilion, and one at the south. The evening beach meeting held at the foot of Ocean Parkway at six P.M. is led by the venerable president of the Ocean Grove Association, Dr. A. E. Ballard, now in his ninety-second year. Some of the good doctor's friends are so confident of his reaching the century mark that they are already thinking of plans for the celebration of his hundredth birthday.

One of the interesting features of Ocean Grove's early summer was the celebration of Dr. Charles H. Yatman's sixtieth birthday in the Young People's Temple. For twenty-five years, beginning in 1884, Dr. Yatman was the leader of this service, before beginning his world-wide evangelistic tours. He responded to the greeting of his friends with an earnest address on "God, the Gospel, the Bible, and Old Glory." He exhibited the flag which he carried with him on his world-tours, and also into every State of the Union, and which bears the signatures of many notables. Sixty girls came forward at the close of the service, each presenting the evangelist with a rose.

HIS OLD ENEMY

BY J. J. BELL

A Story in Two Parts, of Which This is Part One

OF THE few passengers to disembark from the yellow-funneled steamer on a certain fine March evening, Mr. Joseph Redhorn, the Fairport painter, was the last. Apart from the fact that he was not a pushful person in any circumstances, he was burdened with two bulky parcels containing rolls of wall-papers purchased that day in the city.

Mr. Redhorn was tired. He had a moderate headache, the effect of the city's racket plus a two-penny mutton pie consumed in haste after a seven hours' fast. His feet were very cold—"perishin,'" as he would have expressed it. Altogether he was ripe for his carpet slippers, shabby old easy-chair and untidy fireside, also a cup of tea, and, perchance, a dose of what he called his "Dyspeepsia Elixir."

Therefore, he looked none too well pleased when the piermaster, having received his penny, took his arm and, with furtive glances in the direction of the village, drew him into the little office, saying: "I've something to say to ye, Joseph."

"Is't important, Tammas?"

"It's about Danks, the fishmonger," the piermaster replied with much solemnity of manner.

"Oh, dear me!" sighed Mr. Redhorn wearily. "I'm no' interested in Danks this evenin'—even if he has been playin' another o' his dirty tricks on me. I'm no' interrested in ony human bein', nor in onything animal, vegetable or mineral, excep' Joseph Redhorn. I'm ower wearied. So I'll bid ye guidnicht, or adieu—whichever ye prefer."

"Haud on, man!" cried the piermaster, catching him by the sleeve. "I'm glad to hear ye say ye're no' interrested in Peter Danks!" The words were uttered most impressively.

"Eh?" Mr. Redhorn's expression became more alert. "What dae ye mean, Tammas? There's mair in yer remark nor meets the eye."

"I mean exac'ly what I say, an' I hope ye'll tak' it as a frien'ly hint."

Mr. Redhorn stared. "A frien'ly hint?"

"Jist that," said Thomas a trifle impatiently. "Ye're a saft-hearted sort o' chap, Joseph," he went on mildly, "an' although Danks an' you ha'e been enemies as far back as I can mind, if Danks was comin' on ye sudden-like for to borrow a hundred pound—"

"Tits, man! What are ye talkin' aboot? Danks borrow a hundred pound? Ye'll see him ridin' an elephant first!"

"Weel, I can only assure ye that some o' us in Fairport—I needna mention names—ha'e been asked to lend the sum I've mentioned."

"To Peter Danks?" Mr. Redhorn let fall one of his parcels.

"Ay, to Peter Danks. . . . An' I thought I would jist gi'e ye a hint—"

"But—but Danks is the solidest man in Fairport!"

"So it has been supposed," said the piermaster dryly. "Of course, what I'm tellin' ye is confe dential."

"Oh, I'm as secret as the tomb," Mr. Redhor returned, scratching his head. "But I'm stupefied I canna comprehend it, Tammas." Suddenly h peeped through the small window. "See! Thon der's Danks at his door, chattin' wi' his cronies, jist the same as he's been every fine evenin' for twenty year. I'm thinkin' he's been takin' a rise oot o' you an' the others."

Thomas shook his head. "Danks there is daein his best to keep up appearances. Of course, hi cronies ken naething aboot his affairs; naebody in Fairport does, excep' you an' me an' twa-three others. But the man's in a bad way—desperate for cash. . . . Aweel, I've warned ye, Joseph, an' the subjec' is closed atween us."

"An' I'm obliged to ye, Tammas, though in a way yer warnin's wasted, for Danks would never come to me—no' if he was on the verge of bankruptcy. Weel, I'll be movin' hame." The painter recovered hold of his parcel, bade his friend goodnight, and left the office.

In order to reach his abode it was necessary to pass by the fish shop. To all appearances Mr Danks was swelling with as much importance as ever, and his harsh, sneering laugh fell more than once on the painter's ears. Yet, for the first time in many years, Mr. Redhorn was spared the mental exertion of producing a smart retort to his enemy's sarcastic personal remarks. With a nod to the group

THE WORLD READY FOR HIS RETURN?

IF JESUS CAME TO-DAY WOULD HE BE GLAD OR GRIEVED WITH THE PROGRESS OF HIS CHURCH?

uld Find That the World Is Slowly but Surely Being Won to Himself

ERRING to the letter and to your re- est on your editorial page of June 25, me to say most certainly the Master find that the little flower which he has d and which he watered with his precious and tears, has taken root in his world, branches and perfume are extending all is kingdom. He plainly states in Luke that there will be divisions on account Gospel. These same divisions broke out the earlier churches. Note especially reat man of God, Paul. But are the dif- es in our churches so great as they seem ? Do not God's churches of whatever Baptist, Methodist, Christian, Evan- , agree on more than two things: The Supper, the divinity of Jesus, baptism? st could be extended.

course, we are loyal to our church,' and ot? If I believe in God (and I do with heart and all my soul), because some one n a church of a different name believes ame, but is loyal to that particular h, I see no war of creeds there. I will udge; I am positively unfit to do that. imself will judge, and there will be no es made. There were hundreds and thou- who even took their religion with them he caves under the ground, driven there ruel world, shortly after Jesus left. He would also find that the f Paul, of John, of Luke, of Matthew, of had increased to millions. A great mass n-churchgoers existed in the time of Jesus. would pay no heed to him then, as now. hat the church can do is to earnestly and preach Christ crucified. We dare lame our pastors for these non-church- goers. We would have less of this, and less of white slavery, yes, less of every sin, if church members would rally around their pastors and live consistent Christian lives. "Go ye forth," (Matt. 28: 19), is being complied with, slowly but surely; note a nation's appeal for Christian prayer—a nation long steeped in ignorance and sin. Yes, truly, Master, thou art winning the world to thee; thy blood was not shed in vain.

Would He Find a World Following Devils' Instead of "Walking with Christ"?

THE claim that we have the right of "private judgment" is only good when our views are what God wants. If the Word is searched, and followed with as much faith as an earthly would not be led astray by Satan, and I Cor. 1: 10 could not be said of us.

The trouble with us is that we have followed devils clothed as angels of light, instead of being yoked with Christ, and walking with him—not far off. Christ said: "Follow thou me."

Newark, N. J. READER.

He Would Find the World Materially Advancing, but Spiritually Declining

FROM what Christ himself says he should find the world worse, for in Luke 18: 8 it is asked: "When the Son of Man cometh, shall he find faith on the earth?" In Matt. 24: 12, after his disciples had asked him, "What shall be the sign of thy coming and of the end of the world?" among other things he said: "Because iniquity shall abound, the love of many shall wax cold." In verse 37 of the same chapter he also says: "As the days of Noah were, so shall also the coming of the Son of Man be; for as in the days that were before the flood they were eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage, until the day that Noah entered into the ark, and knew not till the flood came and took them all away, so shall also the coming of the Son of Man be." Also Luke 17: 28, 29: "Likewise also as it was in the days of Lot; they did eat, they drank, they bought, they sold, they planted, they builded; but the same day that Lot went out of Sodom, it rained fire and brimstone from heaven and destroyed them all. Even thus shall it be when the Son of Man is revealed."

Again II Tim. 3: 1-5: "This know also, that in the last days perilous times shall come, for men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemous, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, truce-breakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good, traitors, heady, high-minded, lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God, having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof; from such turn away." In II Peter 3: 3 we read that there shall come in the last days scoffers walking after their own lusts and saying: "Where is the promise of his coming?" but (verse 10) "the day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night, in which the heaven, being on fire, shall be dissolved and the elements shall melt with fervent heat. Nevertheless we according to his promise look for new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness."

From these various passages of Holy Writ it would appear that while the world materially is advancing it is spiritually declining.

Think Pastors Everywhere Should Make it a Prominent Topic

I AM very glad that friends in the Southland have expressed an interest in what I believe is one of the most important subjects of our day—the Lord's coming. Many readers in the North are deeply interested in the same subject, for the signs of the times indicate that we are nearing a great crisis, which even this generation may be privileged to witness. Rev. A. B. Simpson has written in a recent book: "And now, having considered all these things, what manner of persons ought we to be in all holy conversation and godliness, looking for and hasting into the coming of the day of God?"

Personally I think every preacher of the Gospel should make this subject prominent. The message that "Jesus is coming soon" is a timely theme. Happy are those who are "watching and loving his appearance." This is a purifying hope, and is needed in these times of peril. J. WARREN WHITE.

He Would Find Much to Grieve Him and Yet Much to Rejoice

IF JESUS were to come now, he would view the unfinished work, and would see much to grieve him. But can we ignore what Christianity has done in the past nineteen hundred years? One good look at the world's conditlon at the time of Jesus is sufficient to convince any one that much has been done for the betterment of man.

"The kingdom of God cometh not with observation." Can mortal man take his yardstick and measure the growth of the kingdom of God?

Do we believe in the words of Jesus? Do we rest upon the promises of God? If they are built upon the foundation of eternal truth, they cannot fail.

"Then I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto me," is true to-day. Have faith in God.

Would Jesus Find Christians Strangers to Himself or Having Their "Conversation in Heaven"?

AS TO the world's preparation for Christ, if I were asked what one thing the world, the flesh and the devil try hardest to prevent us from getting, I would reply, "Conversations with Christ." One may be a most religious person—busy all day long about God's matters; one may give time and money and thought to him, and yet one may never really know him. And some day such a one sees his work crumble away and himself left naked—suddenly awake up to the fact that he and his Saviour are strangers.

He meant that we should have talked to him continually about everything we did, and everything we cared about, and should have been always conscious of his sympathy, and oversight, and working. He meant us to have asked his counsel; to have told him our anxieties, and he would have ended them; to have asked him for light about doctrine which we could not understand; to have confessed to him our secret sin and he would have forgiven and cleansed us. Christian Herald Family Workers

IN obedience to a large number of requests we announced last week an extension of our coupon offer, whereby friends may continue their efforts to influence new members during this month. At the same time we announced a reduction of the offer to 30 cents for five months, also we stated that to friends sending in six coupons we would present, with our compliments, a Red Letter New Testament. This will enable many who sent in but two or three coupons to send in additional ones and thereby gain a Red Letter New Testament, for, of course, all who send in one or more coupons during July, may now increase the number to six and get credit for the ones already sent. Thus they would become entitled to the Red Letter New Testament.

Have You Taken Advantage of This Opportunity?

Have you sent in one or more coupons? Surely you must know of several friends who would be better off for reading THE CHRISTIAN HERALD every week. As we have stated before it is a form of Home Missionary work which you cannot afford to overlook. In due time these friends will feel in their hearts the soul-inspiring messages which THE CHRISTIAN HERALD voices each week and before long we shall have gotten their cooperation secured for the extension of the Redeemer's kingdom.

P.S.—The Red Letter New Testament which is given as a reward in the offer above is the same as we have been selling for one dollar per copy. This Testament, especially designed by the late Dr. Louis Klopsch, contains the Authorized Version printed in black, except that every word recorded therein as having been spoken by our Lord is printed in Red.

Get last week's CHRISTIAN HERALD, fill in the coupons and mail them to us before it is too late.

of idlers, who were plainly astonished at the fishmonger's silence, he proceeded to his bachelor abode where, to his surprise and gratification, he discovered Willie, his apprentice, in the act of preparing tea.

"Wullie!" he cried, "this is exceedin' kind o' ye."

"Oh, I had a message for ye aboot that paper for Miss Grogan's bedroom," the boy replied, "an' I thought I might as weel come early an' get ready yer tea. An' here"—he took a glass from the mantelpiece—"here's a dose o' the Elixir. I thought ye would be the better o' it after yer day in Glesca."

"Upon ma word," said Mr. Redhorn, accepting the dose, though somewhat staggered by his apprentice's attention, "I'm fair amazed at yer thoughtfulness, laddie. Here's to ye!"

"Oh, that's a' richt," said Willie easily. "It's guid for ye, an' I like fine to se ye makin' faces."

When a full week had elapsed without anything special happening to stimulate the gossips of Fairport, Mr. Redhorn began to doubt the accuracy of the piermaster's estimate of the fishmonger's financial condition, and at the end of three weeks he decided that the Danks panic had been either merely temporary or (which was far more likely) an elaborate piece of "codding" on that sardonic person's part. He had known Danks for many years as the most close-fisted person in the village; he was aware that five years ago Danks had inherited a couple of thousand pounds; moreover, Danks, like himself, was a bachelor without a dependent. The painter was not the sort of man who finds entertainment in prying into and discussing his neighbor's business; indeed, he shrank from revelations of all kinds, but more especially from those of an unhappy nature. So he made no inquiries, and let the matter slip from his mind, gladly enough.

On the evening of the first of April Mr. Redhorn sat at his untidy fire trying to darn a sock. The atmosphere around him was redolent of eucalyptus. He was beginning to recover from what he called his "annual spring cauld in the heid," which had kept him indoors for the past three days. As he was wont to explain to those who accused him of malingering, there were, doubtless, professions for which a clear head was unnecessary, but the painting trade was not one of them; also, he was not going to risk his reputation of paper-hanger and decorator by sneezing in the midst of a delicate operation; finally, no other human head had ever been afflicted with such a cold as his—it was unique in the annals of influenza.

Mr. Redhorn regarded the sock in his hand with extreme disfavor. "There'll sune be nane o' the oreeginal left," he muttered. "Darns, darns, darns! Oh, for the moral courage to fling it in the fire!"

He threw it under the t ble instead and took up a book. But after reading steadily for five minutes, he returned the book to the low shelf at the side of the fireplace. "It's no' as guid as usual," he reflected, "or else ma passion for literature is failin'." He sighed heavily.

The fact is that Mr. Redhorn was seriously depressed. No doubt his cold, and perhaps also the sock had contributed to his gloom, but the primary cause was his apprentice. For Willie had accepted an invitation to draughts and lemonade for 7.30 prompt, and it was now near to nine o'clock. An hour ago Mr. Redhorn, glancing out of the window prior to lowering the blind, had observed the boy in earnest conversation with a damsel of about his own age, fifteen, and not lacking in personal charms.

"H'm! I suppose it had to come sooner or later," the painter dreamily soliloquized, as the little scene now recurred to him. "In the spring, accordin' to the poet Byron, a young man's fancy turns to thoughts o' love. Aweel, it's better nor bettin' on horses, onyway. An' I daresay it's maybe mair excitin' nor draughts. Ay, youth's a fine thing, an' auld age has been said to ha'e its beauties; but middle-age, wi' a cauld in the heid an' a tendency to dyspeepsia, no' to mention chilblains, lumpy socks an' nae company—middle-age, I declare, is— Come in, come in! The door's no' bolted."

Willie entered, panting, his eyes shining.

"Sit doon, laddie," said Mr. Redhorn, with less cordiality of tone than the apprentice was accustomed to.

"I couldna come ony earlier," Willie gasped, seating himself. "I've been that busy gatherin' news. I've got some rare news for ye!"

"I presume," the painter remarked ironically, "ye ha'e deigned to appear in order to inform me o' yer approachin' nuptials."

"I dinna ken what ye're gassin'—speakin' aboot," returned Willie. "I cam' to tell ye that Danks is burst."

"Eh?—what's that?"

"I'm sayin', Danks is burst."

Mr. Redhorn recovered himself. "Tits, laddie! That's an auld canary. Wha has been coddin' ye?" he coolly inquired.

"There's nae coddin' aboot it," was the indignant reply. "It's the solemn truth. It's a' through Fairport. If ye hadna had the cauld in yer nose ye would ha'e heard aboot it afore noo."

Mr. Redhorn shook his head. "Na, na, Wullie. Ye've been the victim o' rumor which is entirely devoid o' foundation. Danks is no' the sort to burst."

"But he is burst—as sure as ye're sittin' there," the boy asserted. "I heard it first frae Jessie Forrest, when I was comin' to see ye, an' then I went an' listened to different folk to see what I could hear. They were a' speakin' aboot Danks. He's been gettin' the lend o' money, an' he canna pay it back, an'—"

"That'll dae, laddie." Mr. Redhorn rose. "I'll return in twa meenutes. Ye'll find a bottle o' leemonade in the press," he said, and hurrying to the door, snatched his cap from a peg and left the house.

The piermaster's abode was almost next door, and the piermaster was at home.

"Ay, it's true," he said in answer to the painter's question. "Ye wouldna believe me afore, Joseph, but I was richt. Danks has been speculatin' in secret for years an' lossin' a' he made at his business an' a heap mair besides. He's been borrowin' frae moneylenders, an' he's had a bill dishonored. I was tell't the day that his name is in this week's Black List—"

"What? The Black List — that vilest publication o' modern ceevilization!"

"The same," said Thomas. "An I ken for a fac' that if Danks canna produce twa hundred pound by the morn's mornin' he's a done man. An' he's that already, for wha's gaun to trust him wi' twa hundred pound? No' me, nor you either, I'm thinkin'!"

A short pause, and Mr. Redhorn inquired: "Ha'e ye seen him the nicht?"

"No' to speak to. I gaed up to the shop wi' the intention o' speakin', but the door was shut, an' when I keeked through the wee hole in the shutters I seen him sittin' there wi' his heid in his han's—an' so I turned an' cam' awa'. My soul! I was kind o' vexed for the man, though I never liked him."

"Sittin' there," said Mr. Redhorn musingly. "surrounded by his faithful but helpless fish. Aye, it's a sad, sad job."

"It is, but he's only got hissel' to blame. He canna expec' us to help him noo. There's naebody in Fairport wi' siller to put in a sinkin' ship."

"True, Tammas, true," the painter slowy admitted. "Weel, I'll awa' back to—"

"He hasna been at you—has he?" suddenly asked the piermaster.

"Na, na. He kens better nor to come to me." And Mr. Redhorn retreated to his own abode.

BLIND FANNY CROSBY HELPS THE BLIND

FANNY J. CROSBY, the famous blind hymn writer, is the president of the new organization, the Golden Rule Alliance of America. Miss Crosby was for many years a teacher in the New York Institute for the Blind. There she formed the friendship of Grover Cleveland, who, as a young man, was a secretary in the school. Here work in connection with the Bowery Mission is replete with incident.

The Alliance has Lillian A. Lilly, Luella Pierce and Anna Stahl Allendorf for its vice-presidents. Rev. Edwin C. Holman is treasurer, and Mabel F. Holman, secretary. Already a wide field of service is being opened to the new organization. A father and mother in New Jersey called the attention of the Alliance to a baby with sore eyes. The parents were unable to give the child proper medical treatment. The Golden Rule Alliance assisted them, and the child was treated at the New York City Eye and Ear Infirmary. A complete cure resulted and the child's eyesight was saved.

In northern New York lives a girl twelve years old. Her parents are toilers, and life has become a struggle for daily bread. The blind child's affliction has not received proper care and treatment. She is a physical weakling. An effort has been made to place her in some home or school for the blind, but it failed. Arrangements were made for her at one of the leading hospitals, and it is confidently expected that there will be a complete cure of her ankles and wrists.

The Golden Rule Alliance is arranging to establish a home for blind girls, open to children from any State in the Union. Fanny Crosby has made an appeal in behalf of the project, in which she writes: "I believe that it is to see this plan advanced that my life has been spared. I now pray that God will lengthen my days until the work has been fully accomplished. There is no need greater than that of a home where blind girls may be surrounded with protecting love, be taught to support themselves, and feel that they are sheltered from the tempests that beat upon their frail forms."

Any reader interested in this worthy humanitarian work may address the secretary, Mabel F. Holman, 75 Fifth Avenue, New York, for all information.

BEY AND GOD CLEARS THE WAY*

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON BY DR. AND MRS. WILBUR F. CRAFTS

OD led the people about . . . by the Red Sea" (Ex. 13: 18). They moved in a southeasterly direction and crossed the sea a little south of what is now Suez.

nd the Lord went before them" (Ex. 13: 21). His ence was as a cloud by day and fire by night.

nd the pillar of the cloud went from before their face stood behind them" (Ex. 14: 19). This God did, be- e the hosts of Pharaoh had started in pursuit of the elites to bring them back to Egypt and bondage.

t was a cloud of darkness to them [the Egyptians], t gave light to these" [the Israelites] (Ex. 14: 20).

o that one came not near the other all night" (Ex. 14: And thus God kept the beast from seizing his prey.

he Lord caused the sea to go back" (v. 21). He used strong east wind as a broom to sweep the waters back, there was a dry path in the midst of the sea, by which Israelites crossed in safety. The Egyptians followed n that same path, but more slowly because they were ing in the dark.

he Lord troubled the host of the Egyptians" (v. 24). nade the wheels of their chariots drag in the sand, and aused the hoofs of their horses to be broken. "Let us from the face of Israel, for the Lord fighteth for n," exclaimed the Egyptians. But before they could about and retreat, God rolled the sea over them, and were drowned. "Thus the Lord saved Israel that day of the hand of the Egyptians" (v. 30). "And Israel the Egyptians dead upon the seashore" (v. 30). And people feared the Lord, and believed the Lord and his ant Moses (v. 31).

ow we should open our Bibles and read the fifteenth pter of Exodus, from the first to the twenty-third verse, ch contains the song of Moses, in which he led the elites to sing praises to God for his deliverance. And iam, the sister of Moses, with a timbrel (tambourine) her hand led the women as they joined in the song (Ex. 20). Rawlinson, the great historian, says of that g: "It is the pattern thanksgiving hymn for the Church God in all ages." Dean Stanley said of it: "In Moses' g and Miriam's response, the nation found its voice in first Hebrew melody, in the first burst of national try, which still lives on through Handel's music."

here are many lessons to be learned from the Passover l the attendant incidents, but the most practical of all bedience. It was no easy matter for the Israelites to ke the necessary preparation for the sudden leave-taking Egypt. They would have said "impossible" if they had owed themselves to take counsel of their fears. They ply obeyed God's instructions given through Moses, and en marching orders came, they moved breast forward. order to appreciate how brave they were in their obedi- e, we must consider the jaws of death into which they rched. We read in Ex. 14: 3 that they were "entangled the land." What does this mean? The great wall for defense of Egypt was on their left as they moved south- rd, led by their mysterious Guide; the Red Sea was in nt of them, while to the west and north there dwelt hos- e people. To move forward in any direction was either rilous or seemingly impossible, while to stand still was tain death either by conquest or starvation. And what ey did was to obey, to obey God. Moses encouraged them God by saying, "The Lord shall fight for you, and ye all hold your peace" (Ex. 14: 14). And we have learned w wonderfully God did help them!

Let not this lesson in obedience be lost upon us. We ll find yet others in the Bible, as in the account of Jacob, o, after he had dwelt in Haran fourteen years, was ld by God: "Arise, get thee out of this land, and return to the land of thy kindred" (Gen. 31: 13). Then Rachel, s wife, gave him the best possible advice: "Whatsoever od hath said unto thee, do" (Gen. 31: 16). And it is recorded that "Jacob rose up and passed over the river [Euphrates] and set his face toward Mount Gilead" (Gen. 31: 21). That mountain was like a great watch-tower which overlooked Jacob's homeland.

We place beside Rachel another woman, even Mary, the mother of Jesus, in the matter of enjoining obedience at the marriage feast of Cana. Wine was lacking, and when it became apparent that Jesus would do something about it, Mary said to the servants: "Whatsoever he saith unto you, do it." Jesus said: "Fill the waterpots with water." And they filled them to the brim. Then Jesus said, "Draw out now, and bear unto the governor of the feast." And they bore it.

Here are two stories about great army generals, good for boys to hear; the first is about an English general, the great Duke of Wellington, and the second is about General U. S. Grant, our great American general.

An English farmer was one day at work in his field when he saw a party of huntsmen riding over the farm. Anxious that they should not pass through one field when the crop was in a condition to be badly injured by the tramp of horses, he sent a boy to shut the gate, and on no account to allow it to be opened. The huntsmen came up and ordered the gate to be opened. The boy declined to do it, stating the orders he had received and his determination not to open the gate. Threats and bribes were offered alike in vain. After a while one of noble presence advanced and said in commanding tones: "My boy, do you not know me? I am the Duke of Wellington, one not accustomed to be disobeyed, and I command you to open that gate that I and my friends may pass through." The boy lifted his cap and stood uncovered before the man whom all England delighted to honor, and then answered firmly: "I am sure the Duke of Wellington would not wish me to disobey orders. I must keep this gate shut, nor suffer any one to pass through but with my master's express permission." Greatly pleased, the sturdy old warrior lifted his own hat and said: "I honor the man or boy who can neither be bribed or frightened into doing wrong." And handing the boy a glittering sovereign ($5) the old duke put spurs to his horse and galloped away.

Some boys think they will not need to obey anybody when they grow to be men. The story about General Grant, now to be given, will show the nobleness of obedience. He was very ill for two years or more before he died, and during that time he took his food and medicine exactly as his physicians told him to do it. Sixty-three years old, and a great general, and yet not too great nor too old to obey. Some one has said it was "because he had formed the soldierly habit of obedience." If we did but know it, obedience will show our greatness rather than our littleness.

The keeper of a great prison, Warden Brush, has said: "I never hear a child's sullen 'I will not' without shuddering, for disobedience to parents is often the beginning of a path that leads straight to prison doors. Disobedience to the laws of the State, which is criminal, begins in disobedience, which is unfilial." To obey is the greatest lesson a young person can learn. There appeared in a Berlin paper the following incident. A switchman was at the junction of two lines of railway, his lever in hand, for a train was signaled. The engine was within a few seconds of reaching the embankment, when the man on turning his head perceived his little boy on the rails of the lines the train was to pass over. With an heroic devotedness to his duty, the man adopted a sublime resolution. "Lie down," he shouted to the child, but as to himself, he remained at his post. The train passed along its way and the lives of one hundred passengers were saved. But the poor child! The father rushed forward, expecting to take up only a corpse; but what was his joy on finding that the boy had at once obeyed his order. He had laid down and the whole train had passed over him without injury. The next day the king sent for the man and attached to his breast the medal for civil courage. In this story there is a lesson for sons and fathers alike, for boys to obey their fathers, and for fathers to train their boys in obedience.

OUR SUNDAY SCHOOL SUPERINTENDENTS' ROUND TABLE

—The teachers of The Christian Herald llion Bible Class attended the Pan-Presbyte- n Alliance in Aberdeen as the first of eight eat conferences, mostly international in ich they are participating this summer. hool by representatives of all the Reformed d Presbyterian churches of the world will be interest and value. A Welsh speaker mented the decline of attendance at Presby- rian Sunday schools in Wales. While the urch membership had gained several hun- ed, the Sunday school enrollment had fallen more than four thousand. The speaker tributed the falling off to inefficient teachers, which several other speakers referred. Pu- ls in many classes see too great a contrast twcen their trained teachers in day schools d their untrained teachers in Sunday schools. he speaker said that even unconverted per- ns were placed in charge of Sunday school asses in many cases.

Dr. J. A. Worden, of Philadelphia, then ade a plea for the establishment of teacher- aining classes of three kinds: First, in the nday school itself where a group, large or small, of young people aspiring to be fitted for effective teaching should be taught how to teach in the regular lesson time by some suitable person, using some suitable text-book. Second, teacher-training classes for the teachers themselves meeting at some other than the Sunday school hour and taught preferably by the pastor, as one of his most important tasks. Third, teacher-training classes in institutions of learning to prepare those soon to graduate for efficient service in the Sunday school. Those desiring to establish such classes should write to Dr. Worden or to the Sunday school leader of their own denomination.

An Irish preacher following Dr. Worden said that while teacher-training is of value, the most important thing is for a teacher to know the Bible and to be filled with a passion to apply its saving truths to others. A Canadian speaker remarked that although teacher-training is one of the most urgent duties of the church, it is very hard to secure teachers for such training classes. He believed the ministers of the church should do this as one of their most important duties, and that theological seminaries should have courses of lectures to prepare them to do this training work in the best way. This proposal was strongly supported by Rev. A. Van der Meer, of Michigan, who had found time in his own pastorate not only to train teachers, but to teach the young.

—Professor Cowan, of Aberdeen, having referred to the faithfulness and religious interest with which day school teachers in Scotland taught the Bible and catechism as a part of their daily work, said that Sunday school superintendents ought not to be so shy about asking these skilled teachers, who have their weekly rest day on Saturday to teach on Sunday. We are too ready to make the excuse for them that "having taught children all the week, they should not be asked to teach on Sunday." Rather let us say, "Noblesse oblige," and summon them to use their teaching talents where they are most needed and will help most to mold character.

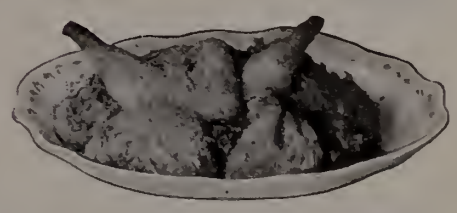
Everybody likes fried chicken. This new kind is even more delicious than the old time variety, and has a delicate taste impossible to obtain heretofore. Dainty flavors are often lost in the characteristic taste of the frying fat used.

CRISCO
For Frying-For Shortening
For Cake Making



Crisco has no taste. It not only makes foods taste better, but makes them more digestible. For Crisco is all vegetable and readily digests. It stays sweet and pure indefinitely.

Follow well these rules for frying chicken:

Drain chicken but do not wipe dry. Season with salt and pepper and dredge well with flour. Put 3 tablespoonfuls of Crisco in frying pan and when hot place chicken in pan, cover, and allow it to steam for ten minutes. Remove the cover from the pan and allow the chicken to brown, taking care to turn frequently. Serve on platter, garnished with parsley; with cream gravy.

WHAT IS MODESTY IN DRESS?

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER, JR.

OH! the letters that have poured into my hands—letters from all of the corners of our country; letters, perhaps a little indignant and letters frankly delighted. But every letter about the same subject—modern dress. I am going to let you read a few of them. The matron of a home devoted to rescue work gives this advice:

Margaret E. Sangster, Jr.

"A girl's clothing should be modest and simple, yet so neat and becoming that she can go on the street or any public place without attracting attention. Regardless of the demands of fashion it would be well for us to bring up our standard of dress."

A lady of the old South sends this message to the girls: "A young man of high ideals said to me: 'The women of the day are not due the courtesy and chivalric spirit of men as they once were. By their mode of dress they prove their own degeneracy.'"

Here is a girl that partly approves of the modern dress. I think that she has a good idea of the situation:

"I feel that I speak for most of my girl friends when I say that we have worn short sleeves and collarless dresses, believing that we were sensibly and modestly attired. There are extremes in dress that are to be condemned, and some thoughtless girls adopt freakish styles; but what style cannot be made extreme?"

The man who wrote this letter is in favor of the present styles. I do not think that he has seen the extremes that we disapprove of:

"To my mind, what you have reported these men to say, speaks the degenerate thoughts of a few men and not at all for the great mass of people. Women should not dress to satisfy the morbid ideas of the degenerate."

This letter brings quite a revelation with it:

"My husband, who is a street car conductor, recently remarked: 'I wonder if women talk about men the way men do about them!' I am sure there was food for thought in that remark. Why shouldn't men talk? Do you believe that the styles of to-day were created for women only? How many women would slit their skirts quite so much just to let the women see the color of their underskirt? Would they care whether a woman saw their new lace stockings? Certainly not! It is for the men that these styles are created—created by those who care only for men's admiring glances."

This line of good common sense comes from a reader in New York City:

"My regard for a woman who follows the fashions to the exclusion of common sense, or modesty, is greatly lessened."

This letter is from a New Jersey girl. She is very frank in her denunciation of extreme dressing:

"I am counted as a well-dressed and fashionable girl, but however 'peculiar' I may be called, no one shall ever see me dressed in the manner which is so appalling to all Christian humanity."

Has it ever occurred to you, girls, that the people of other nations are beginning to look down on the American woman? This letter seems to give that impression.

"I was standing in the vestibule of our cottage on Decoration Day, and as I watched the crowd stream by, I became conscious of an indignant feeling in my heart, for I was ashamed of some of my sex. After seeing the skirts and coats and other articles of apparel that are being worn just now, I have come to the conclusion that, as a matter of patriotism alone, it should be denounced, in that it is lowering the standard of American womanhood."

This note is from a lady who has gone very fully into the problem of the day:

"The work of modern times has changed men's dress with a view to greater efficiency and that which hindered has given place to something more useful. Women and the styles in women's dress are following the same lead for similar reasons. Shoes with raised heels have been worn for too long. The silly fashion probably began because a woman of short stature put them on to make herself look taller, and being a well-dressed woman, her friends followed her lead like a flock of sheep."

This sounds rather sensible to me.

"I confess that the new fashions are not at all beautiful. Pope's lines:

" 'Be not the first by whom the new are tried,
Nor yet the last to lay the old aside,' are well worth considering, when the consideration of modern dress crosses our path."

The bit of homespun philosophy in this note is from a little lady who laughingly calls herself "in the grandmother class":

"Since I can remember, fashions have come and gone, and it seems that about every possible change has been made. But for immodest dress, surely the present day styles exceed anything I can ever call to mind. I remember the low neck and short sleeves of the late fifties, but they were not to be compared with the present styles."

Don't you think I have shown you enough letters for this time? Because there are so many who say practically the same things, I felt sure you would be bored—and I don't want to bore you. It is too vitally important to the girls of America.

Do not think that anybody wants you to dress in the fashion of a dead generation. That idea is far away. Many of the present-day fashions are sensible, as well as being in good taste. But, girls, avoid the extreme, the immodest dress that causes comment on the street corner and raised eyebrows in the public place.

I have read many articles in the last few months; talks that threw bouquets at some of the modern fashions, and talks that threw bricks.

Friends of mine, I know that you are sensible, right-thinking girls. What do you throw on the stage before the god of fashion and his manikins? Is it a bouquet or a brick?

BLACK-EYED SUSANS

(Suggested by the cover of this issue, which is reproduced through the courtesy of the the American Optical Company)

"HE loves me!" murmured the little maid.
"And he loves me not!" she said,
As the petals fell 'neath her baby hand
To the grass, where they withered dead.
And the summer sun from the heavens' arch
Gleamed down on the solemn pair,
And the angels smiled as they watched the child
Who had never a pain or care.

The flowers have crumbled away to dust,
And the little maid's hair is gray,
And her life is too sordid and full of woe
To stand in the sun and play.
But memories come of the summertime,
And her heart has a tiny spot
Which remembers the day when she used to say:
"He loves me—he loves me not!"

"ALL HAIL TO-DAY"

BOY SCOUTS' SONG

Dedicated to The Christian Herald Children's Home

by George Washington Sweigert — Music by Benjamin Franklin Butts

The Boy Scouts of A - mer - i - ca, All hail to - day, all hail to - day,
Our glo - rious flag brought from the fray, All hail to - day, all hail to - day,
Each scout will loy - al prove to be, To that grand flag that sets us free,
And gives us all great lib - er - ty, All hail to - day, all hail to - day.

Copyright, 1913, by Benjamin Franklin Butts

The Boy Scouts of America,
All hail to-day, all hail to-day!
Our glorious flag brought from the fray,
All hail to-day, all hail to-day!
Each Scout will loyal prove to be
To that grand flag that sets us free,
And gives us all great liberty!
All hail to-day, all hail to-day!

We make for peace and not for rout,
As loyal Scouts, as loyal Scouts!
We bring good cheer, without a doubt,
As loyal Scouts, as loyal Scouts!
When to the woods we hie away,
Upon a pleasant summer day,
We learn great lessons while we play,
As loyal Scouts, as loyal Scouts!

Our friendship we to each reveal,
As true as steel, as true as steel!
To parents dear our word we seal,
As true as steel, as true as steel!
No matter what our lot may be,
A smile we'll wear right cheerfully,
And whistle all the time, you see,
As true as steel, as true as steel!

Such sturdy boys you never saw,
Hip, hip, hurrah! hip, hip, hurrah!
We all are pledged to keep our law,
Hip, hip, hurrah! hip, hip, hurrah!
And should we see one in distress,
With kindest deeds that one we bless,
And so each day we do our best,
Hip, hip, hurrah! hip, hip, hurrah!

A New Hernial Appliance

This Invention Holds More Firmly, Comfortably and Surely Than Any Truss.

Sent on Trial

The new Brooks Appliance for rupture so thoroughly meets every test and requirement that it is ordered by the U. S. Government for use in the army and navy, as the most reliable support ever invented. It is a radical departure from the old leg strap and cumbersome pad. Automatic Air Cushion binds and draws together the muscles in the way they should and always retains them perfectly, no matter what position the body assumes or how much exercise is taken. The Appliance is held in place by elastic straps which cannot slip, as the pressure is always in proportion to the support required. It is durable, cheap, sanitary, and cannot harden or get out of shape. Can be worn in bed or bath. Has no metal to rust. Is inexpensive, and it is easy to keep clean. Is comfortable because of the constant circulation of air through it.

This Appliance is sold under a positive guarantee of money refunded if not satisfactory. We do not guarantee to cure, for no truss or any other appliance will do that. We do guarantee to furnish a perfect Rupture Appliance which will give the highest relief, comfort and retain the reducible rupture at all times, and prevent it from coming down. We do guarantee to fit any reducible rupture, no matter what shape it is in or where it is located, and if you are not entirely satisfied with the Appliance after you have had it in your possession 10 days, the price paid will be refunded in full.

Further information regarding the Appliance, rules for self-measurement and ordering sent FREE. Just send your name and address to

THE POPE'S GUARDS REVOLT

A STATE OF SIEGE IN THE VATICAN AND HOW IT CAME ABOUT

AN UNPRECEDENTED thing—a mutiny in the Papal Guard at the Vatican—is reported in the cable despatches from Rome. Twenty-one members of the organization, which is eighty strong and composed of sons of leading Swiss families, have revolted and demanded the removal of their captain. They object to the severity of the discipline, and particularly the unnecessary drills, involving the pursuit of imaginary assailants over the roofs and through the interminable passages of the Vatican buildings. They are an aristocratic body, and consider such maneuvers and other up-to-date tactics as beneath their dignity, and both useless and absurd. Their corps dates back to the sixteenth century. There have been several clashes of authority, accompanied by considerable scuffling, but no blood seems to have been spilt thus far either within the sacred precincts or outside.

Some interesting details of the situation in the Pope's palace are given in the Associated Press despatches. All day on July 23, the Vatican was in a veritable state of siege. All the demands formulated in the memorial sent in by the mutineers were flatly rejected. Three of the leaders of the movement were expelled from the palace. Four others departed later the same day, and twelve more requested leave to depart for their homes in October. Those who left were accompanied to the gates of the Vatican by their comrades. At the moment of separation they shouted "Viva Garibaldi!" and some of them joined in singing the "Marseillaise." Never before was such a scene presented in front of the Vatican.

On the previous day (July 22) the Guards had been relieved of their cartridges, and now even their rifles were taken from them, as it was discovered that they had succeeded in concealing cartridges.

Count Ceccopieri, commander of the Vatican gendarmes, was ordered to hold his men in readiness for emergencies. They were placed in control of all the exits with instructions to prevent any of the Swiss Guards from leaving the building without express permission, and from communicating with those outside. The entire neighborhood was patrolled by strong forces of police.

Serious trouble was expected when the guards were notified that all their claims had been rejected, and it had been arranged that any of the Guards attempting a demonstration should be arrested by the Papal Gendarmes and turned over to the Italian police for transportation to the Swiss frontier.

When the reply to the memorial was read, the commander and other officers, armed with revolvers, stood ready to suppress any show of force. A letter was also read from Cardinal Merry del Val, the Papal Secretary of State, strongly condemning the attitude of the guards. This was the last straw. The guards had hoped that the Cardinal would favor their side. They decided to maintain a relatively calm attitude, however, wishing, as they expressed it, "to obtain their rights through persuasion, rather than violence."

Jealous of American Cardinals

A NEW YORK Tribune cablegram from Rome, under date of July 19, 1913, brings news of a clash between Pope Pius X and the Italian prelates. It is understood to be the Pope's purpose at the coming consistory to create two more American cardinals. A number of bishops have petitioned the Vatican urging that all the cardinals to be chosen should be Italian, as owing to the number of recent deaths of Italian members and the creation of a large number of foreign cardinals, the Italian cardinals have little better than a bare majority, and even this is threatened by the addition of more Americans, who might secure control of the Church. Just what the Pope will do is a matter of conjecture. Under his suave manner, Pope Pius conceals a strong will, and several high officials of the Vatican think the Italian prelates have made a strategic blunder. The Pope has several times intimated his belief that the College of Cardinals should be thoroughly representative of the international scope of the church. The Italian members see their power waning, and hence their fight against any new American cardinals. They regard that country as having had more than its due share of appointments of "princes of the church."

Americans Should Be Vigilant

I AM very much pleased with your stand on the Roman Catholic Church question. While I have every reason to believe that our country can never become as Italy or Spain were, yet it behooves us to remember the injunction and the words of warning left us by our first President, George Washington: "Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty."

THE YOUNG PEOPLE'S MEETINGS

NOTES ON THE CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR, EPWORTH LEAGUE AND BAPTIST YOUNG PEOPLE'S UNION TOPICS

The Forests and Fields*

WE HAVE probably all thought at times what a dreadful calamity it would be to become blind. Yet do e realize that most of us live in a nd of voluntary blindness that may ow to be sadder than actual loss of esight?

This sounds like rather extravagant nguage, but let us consider it. Have ou never noticed that when a great appiness comes to you the whole orld looks different? The leaves are richer green, the sky a deeper blue; ie flowers have a new glory. What as happened? All these things were ie same yesterday. But yesterday ou were partially blind. The new appiness has made you see them as ney are.

You have read or heard S. H. Had-y's thrilling story of his conversion. e said that when he stepped out of erry McAuley's Mission, with the new lory in his soul, he looked up at the ars. He was almost surprised to see iem there. He had forgotten them. hey had been there, night by night, ut he had been blind.

It was an experience like this that saiah was thinking of when he wrote; Ye shall go out with joy and be led orth with peace. The mountains and ie hills shall break forth before you nto singing, and all the trees of the eld shall clap their hands."

A poet has two things to do. He nust see; he must make others see. Many a man who cannot write poetry s nevertheless essentially a poet. He as the poet's soul, the prophet's soul. He is a seer. A poet who can write omes along and expresses what both eel. But a man who does not see, ith this kind of vision, can not be a oet. He may write verses, but he is ot a poet. Milton would not have exhanged his blindness of eye for blindess of soul. He would rather have ved in blindness than to lose the ower to understand life and truth.

Sin, haste, unfriendliness, worry—hese are among the things that make s blind. To really see nature we nust keep our hearts unruffled. We nay keep at work, but we must keep urselves peaceful within. We must eep pure. We must have kindness vithin. We should have a number of reat friendships and, sooner or later, ne great love. We must find and now and truly love—God.

For it is God who makes nature eautiful. The world is beautiful beause God is beautiful. The pure in ieart shall see God, shall see him piritually and commune with him in heir souls; and shall also see him in iis world, the world of flowers and rees and birds and sky and stars.

"Behold the lilies," said Jesus. Are ve really beholding them? Or are we blind?

What do we see, in field and forest, vhen love and peace and God have pened our eyes?

We see first of all law, order. In Nature we learn the pleasures, the deights of obedience. The bird sings, he tree grows, the flower smiles, beause they are obeying law, which is to bey God. We run into restlessness nd distress and failure when we ancy that by disobedience we shall ind what we seek. There are laws of fragrance and color and growth and fruitfulness in nature; there are corresponding laws in the soul. That peasant Teacher who loved flowers ong ago and counseled us to observe hem will unfold to us the laws of the spiritual life and give us power to keep them.

We learn in Nature the lesson of trust. "Wherefore if God so clothe he grass of the field, shall he not much more clothe you, O ye of little faith." We are but motes in the grasp of a mighty hand. The power that is in Nature, the power that is underneath all life, the power that made the human soul, the power that wrought its redemption, this power will keep us day by day, and supply our needs.

We learn in Nature the lesson of joy. There is pain, vast quantities of it, but there is also indomitable joy. Most of the pain is caused by breaking laws. But in the beauty and fragrance and music of Nature, we find the note of joy. What added reasons have we for joy, who can hear of Christ and enter into his friendship! And though we may have pain to bear, now and then, our trust in his law and in his power will keep our hearts glad.

* "Lesson From the Forests and Fields." Christian Endeavor and B. Y. P. U. Topic for Sunday, August 17. Ps. 104: 1-35. (An Outdoor meeting if convenient.)

Neglected Neighborhoods*

YOU can find in almost any town a "neglected neighborhood." The easiest thing to do with such a neighborhood is to keep on neglecting it. But that is not the Christlike thing to do. That is not the thing Christ told his followers to do.

What a magnificent thing it would be if as a result of this Epworth League meeting, which will be held tonight in thousands of churches, some real, fresh, splendid, spiritual work could be begun in some hundreds of these neglected corners!

It is so easy for us to study these topics as if they were about other places and people than ourselves and our homes. Is there a neglected corner in your town, or in your county? If there is what are you going to do about it? Not "What have you been doing about it?" or "What ought you to do about it?" But "What are you going to do about it?"

Can't you get your Epworth League chapter to start in immediately and try to comfort and teach and save the people in that quarter of your town or that corner of your county? Get the Mercy and Help Department to go to see some of these families, to arrange to have some of the young girls go and sing for some one who is sick there, or to take flowers and fruit. Get the spiritual work committee to arrange to hold a cottage prayer-meeting in the neighborhood. Talk the matter over with your pastor. It will delight his soul to know that some one is really beginning to care about these folks who never hear about salvation and almost never feel the sympathy and help of Christian neighbors.

If you can't get the committees interested do something yourself. Do not be afraid. "Let no man despise thee." And "let no man despise thy youth." It is the King's business you are on. He will go with you as you try to take his message and his sunshine to the neglected places.

The thing is to get started. You see, as soon as you have started something, the neighborhood is no longer neglected. And then it will be an easier matter to get some one to come in and help.

Pray about this. Ask the Saviour to give you a clear vision of himself, and to put into your heart a greater desire to carry the message of salvation and cheer to those who live in need. Step by step he will be with you. This is the way new Sunday schools spring up and new churches grow, the way in which gloomy neighborhoods are filled with light.

* "Our Neglected Neighborhoods" (Urban and Rural). Epworth League Topic for Sunday, August 17, 1913. Luke 24: 47; Acts 1: 8; 6: 1-7; Acts 8: 4-6, 26-35.

THE FLAG IS A BEAUTY

I just received the flag and Declaration of Independence this morning. The flag is a beauty, and I thank you very much for it. I don't see how you can furnish such a flag so cheap. I helped defend that flag in the Civil War, so I can appreciate it.

Summer Days Are Flesh Building Days

Gain Healthy Flesh — Increase Your Weight From Ten To Thirty Pounds—This Month—By Taking Sargol

Thin Men and Women say "I'd give most anything to put on a little flesh and weight," but when a friend suggests a way they declare: "Not a chance. I've tried everything and am doomed to stay thin. I'm built that way."

Being "built to stay thin" means only that your digestive tract is so disarranged that it doesn't properly prepare the fat producing elements of your food for assimilation by your blood. Or, it may mean that your blood itself lacks the red corpuscles—the carrying power—to properly absorb these flesh producing ingredients.

In either event the major portion of your needed, normal nourishment goes to waste. It isn't food that makes folks fat. It's what the blood absorbs from the food—the sugars, starches, albuminoids of what you eat. If your body absorbed all the fat making material you eat you would plump up to proper portions very quickly.

You can quickly stop this food waste by eating SARGOL with your meals and by stopping it you can easily, rapidly and safely gain from ten to thirty pounds of solid, healthy weight. Let us prove this. Try SARGOL four days at our expense and note results.

To every thin man and woman who will mail us the coupon below we will gladly send Free a full size 50c Box of SARGOL. SARGOL is a tiny concentrated tablet — safe and efficient — which you take — one at every meal — in order that the fats of your food can make fat on your body. SARGOL acts on your food, on your digestive tract, on your blood cells. It is not sold as a Patent Medicine or cure. Its sole purpose is to make Flesh — good healthy Flesh that means better health, better looks, greater strength and vitality and more active brain. Are you willing to try it four days at our risk?

What Sargol Has Done for Others

WHEN we mail you the Free 50-cent package of SARGOL, we will send you copies of letters received from grateful patrons reporting actual gains in solid, healthy, permanent flesh of from ten to over thirty pounds. We give here a few interesting figures from reports which are being received daily.

F. GAGNON writes:

"Here is my report since taking the Sargol treatment. I am a man 47 years of age and was all run down to the very bottom. I had to quit work as I was so weak. Now, thanks to Sargol, I look like a new man. I gained 22 pounds with 28 days' treatment. I cannot tell you how happy I feel. My face has a good color and I never was so happy in my life."

Questions and Answers

H. E. G., Athens, Ga. 1. "Program" is permissible; "programe" is wrong and evidently a misspelling of "programme." 2. The idea as to the Philippines which you mention is not new. It recognizes our pledge to give them self-government, but holds that they are not yet educated up to the point where they could make an intelligent use of the privilege.

C. E. P., Mapleton, N. D. The present population of the world is estimated at 1,623,000,000, but there are no means of securing accuracy, as in some parts no census is taken and the figures are approximate. Catholicism claims 240,000,000; Protestantism, 150,000,000; Greek Church, 100,000,000; Mohammedans, 200,000,000; Buddhists, 200,000,000; Judaism, 10,000,000; Hinduism, 220,000,000; Confucianism, 275,000,000; Polytheism, 110,000,000; Taoism, 43,000,000; Shintoism, 14,000,000.

Mrs. R. L., Seymour, Ind. For an enumeration of the spiritual gifts see Acts 11: 17; I Cor. 12 and 13; I Peter 4: 10. The gift of healing is held by some denominations as having belonged exclusively to apostolic times, while others claim that it is granted even now to those who have sufficient faith.

George B. Nind, West Somerville, Mass., brings up a new point in reference to the hymn said to have been played while the Titanic was sinking. "If 'Nearer, My God, to Thee' was played by the ship's orchestra, what was the tune played?" he asks. "Was it the one commonly sung to that hymn in this country—Lowell Mason's tune, which in most books bears the name 'Bethany,' or was it one of several tunes to which it is set and sung in England? It is natural to suppose that an English orchestra on an English steamer would play a commonly used English tune, unless the leader of the orchestra considered that under the circumstances, the American tune would be more appealing to the majority of American passengers. There is, however, some significance in the fact that at the great memorial service in Albert Hall, London, it was Dykes's setting of 'Nearer, My God, to Thee' that was played and sung, and at the funeral of the leader of the Titanic's orchestra in his native village near Manchester it was Sullivan's tune which was used. Will some of the survivors from the Titanic tell us what tune they heard on that never-to-be-forgotten night?"

Mrs. N. H. W., Walnut Beach, Conn. 1. Isa. 2: 3-8 is interpreted as a prophecy of Messianic days—the "last days"—when the temple should be set up on Mount Moriah and the Jewish restoration will have begun. See the same Messianic prophecy in Micah, 4th chapter. 2. Write to Secretary of the Faculty of Dartmouth for latest year-book.

Reader, Rural Retreat, Va. What is known as the "Apostles' Creed," in its present form at least, is believed to belong to the fourth century. No ecclesiastical writer before the fifth century makes mention of any gathering of apostles to compose a creed. Among the various creeds in use in the early church (350-400 A.D.) there were some that wholly omitted any reference to the "descent into hell" and the "communion of saints." Ambrose and Rufinus, two leading authorities, make no mention of either. The passage in the creed is held by many authorities to be the equivalent of "He descended into the grave." (See Ps. 16: 9, 10, Acts 2: 24-27, Rom 10: 7.) Others take the view that the "descent into hell" was necessary to the completeness of his work, that he might triumph over Satan as he already had triumphed over death and sin.

Mrs. C. P. W., Wheeler, Texas. There is no distinction whatever between the terms "Holy Spirit" and "Holy Ghost." The words "spirit" and "ghost" are simply two different English renderings of the same Greek word pneuma. At the time the King James Version was made the English word "ghost" was used commonly for "soul," "spirit," "life." It has come, however, to be used chiefly to represent an imaginary appearance of some one who is dead. As English is now spoken "spirit" is the correct word, and the editors of the Revised Versions have used it throughout instead of "ghost." Since, however, the term "Holy Ghost" has such a fixed place in the old Scripture versions and in religious literature and hymnology, it will probably always be more or less used.

M. F., Sr., Wood Bluff, Ala. The Jewish Scribes were originally mere writers or copyists of the law, but this work ultimately developed into a learned profession and the scribes became doctors, teachers, and interpreters of the law as well. They guarded the Jewish Scriptures against any changes or interpolations, and even counted the letters. They also read the law aloud to the people on certain occasions and hence were called Sopherim or public readers. They even enacted prohibitory laws designed to guard the Biblical precepts from being violated. There were many famous scribes who played an important part in Jewish history.

Rev. R. W. Thiot, of the Curtis Baptist Church, Atlanta, Ga., writes: "The question of whether the world is getting better or worse is a much mooted one. It is discussed from many angles, and upon it many of our best thinkers differ. The answer must rest upon what kind of improvement is in the mind of the student of the question. Scientifically, we know the world is moving forward by gigantic strides. When we think of the huge drink bill, the white slave traffic, the oppression of the helpless poor, etc., in the light of present enlightenment, perhaps in the minds of the majority, there is a question as to whether the world is better or worse morally. It seems to me, however, that the basis upon which God decides that question is that of relationship to him. The question which determines eternity with the soul is what we do with Jesus Christ. If the world is being drawn into closer fellowship with the Lord Jesus Christ, in the sight of God, we must believe it is growing better. If not, the opposite must be true. From this viewpoint, the question cannot be settled by world-conditions, but by the spiritual condition of the visible church of God. If the professing believers in Christ are more spiritual, shining brighter, a greater power in the world and leading souls to Christ at a greater ratio than the physical birth-rate, then, and only then, can we believe the world is growing better, as God sees it." Our correspondent is right as to the real character of the test of world-betterment. It must be a spiritual one, not regulated by our advancement in knowledge, art and science, nor by the multitude of our inventions, but by our loving obedience to God's laws, our closer union with him through his Son, and by our application of the teachings of Jesus in our daily lives. The Gospel standard of Christian efficiency is not one of wealth or intellectuality, but of rightness with God and love for our fellow man.

Rev. Henry E. Voss, Pastor Bethania Evangelical Church, Cleveland, Ohio, writes: "I beg to call your attention to a misstatement which I frequently meet in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and other American papers. In printing a sermon by Dr. Dryander, you refer to him as 'Chief Court Preacher of the United Lutheran Church, Berlin.' Allow me to state that there is no 'United Lutheran Church of Prussia.' The official title of that church, of which the German Emperor is the summus episcopus, is 'Evangelical (State) Church of Prussia,' which is a union of the Lutheran and Reformed churches, and of which church the 'German Evangelical Synod of North America' is the independent but recognized branch."

Reader, Canton, Ohio. We have no desire to judge of the merits of your disagreement, although no doubt your brooding over it has exaggerated it out of all proportion. Every true, loyal woman knows and feels and will gladly admit that a wife's proper place is by her husband's side—for better, for worse, through evil report and good report, through all the days of their pilgrimage here. According to your own statement—and we can read love between the lines—you have a good husband, one with his faults to be sure; but who among us hasn't some faults? And then you say he has honesty, industry, self-respect, a good name; that he is a good provider, a Christian, but—sometimes cross. Now, they say the best folks are like mettled horses, disposed to be heady at times, but it is after all a venial fault, singularly human. Most wives would be proud and thankful to have such a husband and such a home and children as you have and many would envy you. We suggest that you take Spurgeon's quaint advice: buy two bears: Bear and Forbear; keep them in the house and if you give them proper care and attention, you won't be troubled any more by those little fitful gusts of temper that have disturbed and darkened your domestic horizon.

Mrs. L. B. W., Greencastle, Ind. The passage in Job 14: 22 refers to the whole man—the body and spirit. It is a chapter in which the afflicted patriarch deals with the common miseries of mankind, but while it is gloomy and pessimistic, it is not to be accepted as an expression of disbelief in a future life. See verses 14 to 16 and also the well-known passage in chapter 19, verses 25 to 27, which sets forth his faith in God most clearly.

H. E. C., Michigan, writes: "I love THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and its weekly visits do seem like those of a friend to me, and a very dear friend. My husband is not a Christian, and does not go to church; but when I read the sermons to him and the boys (we have two boys), he will listen to them and I think he is surely impressed, as he does not ridicule them, as he generally does anything he does not like." This is a typical case. Religion in the home needs to be strengthened and vitalized by attendance at church. We should strive by all means in our power to get the members of the family to value the privilege of worshiping God in his temple. Perhaps a little loving persuasion would bring about this result.

Anxious Inquirer. 1. If one has wronged the government, consciously or otherwise, it is open to the offender to make restitution by sending the money equivalent to the "Conscience Fund," Treasury Department, Washington, D. C. 2. The federal tax is applied to various purposes, pensions among others. It would be practically impossible to differentiate.

Midsummer Evangelism—Open-Air Service on Second Avenue, New York

MIDSUMMER evangelism is in full swing throughout the United States. It is gratifying to the whole country to know that the work in the metropolis is being pushed with energy and faith. The photograph on this page shows a group of New York's "East Siders" listening to an illustrated Gospel talk by Dr. Robert F. Y. Pierce, pastor of Second Avenue Baptist Church. It is in the region of the gun-men and gangsters, and near scenes of poverty and crime. But the people are listening to the Gospel message, and the good seed is bringing forth fruit. In addition to the numerous tent-meetings and open-air street meetings conducted by the New York City Evangelistic Committee, of which Dr. Arthur J. Smith is the superintendent, there are many auxiliary services conducted by young people's societies working in co-operation with the committee. Noon meetings are also conducted in more than a score of shops and factories, some for Italians, some for Hungarians and some in English. Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman recently addressed a conference of the committee's workers at the headquarters, 541 Lexington Avenue. The National Bible Institute, under the presidency of Mr. Don O. Shelton, continues its splendid work of out-door services and meetings in its mission halls. At the Union Square open-air service many Hebrews stop to listen to the message of salvation and a large number of Gospels in Yiddish are distributed. Mr. S. D. Gordon, recently returned from a three year's tour in Europe and Asia, has been assisting the workers of the Institute in their present campaign. Tent Evangel is also continuing its work of former summers, and besides services in the tent conducts open-air meetings and also sends speakers through the city to deliver the Gospel message from a motor car.

Miscellaneous

T. L. R., Canada. There are several excellent lives of Lincoln, in which many characteristic anecdotes appear. The standard biography is that by Nicolay and Hay.

S. W. W., Grant's Mills, R. I. In Ps. 142: 7 the phrase "Bring my soul out of prison," is held by commentators to refer to the prison-house of trouble and affliction (see Ps. 143: 11). There are several passages in the Psalms in which the same figure of speech is employed.

J. A., Olnes, Alaska, and R. S., Morrisville, Vt. The original cause of the Balkan War by the allies against Turkey was the aggressions and persecutions to which the native Christian population of Macedonia, Albania and other sections were subjected by the Turks—Greeks, Bulgars and Serbs also being among the sufferers. The situation had become intolerable.

Mrs. J. S. C., Clear Lake, Iowa. Prov. 16: 4 is interpreted to mean that the Lord hath made all things for his plan or purpose, or according to the requirements of his wisdom and justice. Thus: wickedness is for the day of evil, sin for suffering. These things answer to each other and are therefore united.

E. S., Ovid, Mich. The final ingathering of the Jewish race, now scattered all over the world, is taught in both the Old Testament and the new Testament (see Rom. 11: 11-25.) There is a difference of opinion, however, on points of detail even among the Jews themselves. Some hold that the Scriptures do not necessarily imply that the Jews will return to their old land, and that the restoration will be a spiritual one. Others believe they will be brought back to Palestine after being converted to Christianity.

M. D., New York City. We know of no such school as you mention in your letter.

L. M., Goshen, N. Y. The religious belief of the individual is to him or her a very sacred thing. Nothing is further from the purpose of this paper than to deride any one's creed. "There are many roads leading up the sides of Fujiyama," says the Japanese proverb, "but they all meet at the top." So it may be with our various ways of serving God, who regards the spirit rather than the form of the service.

M. B., Holland, Mich. Prov. 23: 12 is a general injunction, apparently designed specially for the young, to strive to learn at every opportunity and to drink in from the teachings of experience. This idea is frequently found in both Proverbs and Ecclesiastes. It is not the mere knowledge of the world, but the higher wisdom, which teaches us so to order our lives that they may be pleasing to God and useful to all around us.

ONE HOUSE CARRIED FOUR OTHERS TO RUIN

IN THE GRASP OF AN EARTHQUAKE

BY ELMER ERNEST COUNT

AN EYEWITNESS OF THE DISASTER

MAKESHIFT HOMES FOR THE EARTHQUAKE SUFFERERS

BULGARIA is now passing through sad and troublous times. Though victory perched upon banners of the Balkan al- in the war with Turkey, is now involved in a fratri- l war with Servia and ece in the south, while imania has mobilized and eatens us on the north. ile those clouds are hover- over the Bulgarian nation, tations of pestilence and thquake have been contrib- ng their share of baleful aster to this stricken land. wo weeks ago I was visit- some of the poor families Sofia, whose husbands, fa- rs, brothers, and sons, hav- been serving during the t eight months in the war h Turkey, at the front, had t the other members of the nily in dire want. I had st been to a bakery to ar- nge for a daily distribution bread to a number of these fering ones. I felt myself ling forward. I seemed to dazed. It was a very unu- l feeling with me. It passed ay as quickly as it came. I on learned that the whole y had felt a heavy earth- ake shock. Much excitement evailed. The shock was re noticeable to those within ors. Chairs rocked to and ; pianos went moving over polished floors; children in ools fled from the buildings a wild panic.

Soon news leaked through to fia that the center of the thquake was at Tirnovo, the ancient capital Bulgaria. We were told that telegraphic con- tions were broken and full information could be had. We learned no more. The govern- nt for days would not permit complete tid- s of the effect of the shock to be known. A ltitude of soldiers came from the region of the eatest damage. It was feared that, should real exaggerated reports of the disaster reach them, re would be a danger of mutiny. The Bulgarian not without a superstitious awe for such a phe- menon. By some it would be regarded as a tinct warning of the displeasure of God at their ng to war with such Slavic brethren as the Ser- ns. So for several days a large part of the rld was left in ignorance of one of the severest thquakes that has visited this earth in the last ndred years.

As soon as I learned of the seriousness of the shock, I gained permission from the government to visit the scenes of the disaster, to learn of the condition of our church property and give relief to the sufferers. It was midnight when a crowded train of soldiers with a few civilians, including myself, reached Gorna Orehovitza. The moonlight gave a weirdness to the scene. Parts of the walls of the large station had fallen in. Large wooden supports were propping up those that still remained standing. The train service reached no further. We were twelve kilometers from Tirnovo. The only alternative was to walk to that city. We went on the march, up over a hill and through the large town of Gorna Orehovitza. Here destruction was on all sides. Débris was scattered throughout every street. People were camping out amid the wreckage. Along the highways great boulders had fallen from the hillside down into the road. Fissures could be seen everywhere. Some parts of the road had fallen away and gone down into the gullies.

Just two weeks before, I had been in Tirnovo distributing flour to the needy families of soldiers serving in the war and still at the front. It is one of the unique cities of the Balkan peninsula. How different it all appeared now! It seemed like the ruins of a deserted city of ancient times. I tried to make my way over the fallen masonry scattered everywhere to the parsonage of the Methodist church. I was soon challenged by a soldier who was keeping people from passing through streets of great danger. I was told that both church and parsonage were completely destroyed, and no one was permitted to approach them. I inquired for a hotel. All were closed. Some had fallen into ruins. The rest were uninhabitable because of fallen walls and cracked ceilings. I was told to go to the edge of the town where I would be able to find the people. The moon brought into bold relief the awfulness of the earthquake. With some of the buildings the complete front had fallen forward into the street and had blocked the way. With others the walls were bulging out as though from an explosion within. How they remained standing was a mystery.

There was nothing for me to do but to wend my way to the edge of the town, to a place called the Field of Mars. Here, too, a strange scene was pictured. Everywhere were little huts made out of rugs and carpets and cloths. Sad hearts were wandering about at 1.30 in the morning. I inquired for the pastor of the Methodist church. I was told that he was camping out in the garden of his late home. Some one recognized my voice. A woman emerged from a tent of carpets and rugs. I was permitted to peep within, and recognized some familiar faces. I was bidden to enter. I crawled within, thankful that I had shelter from the dews of night, and a place to stretch my weary limbs.

Then the story of the earthquake was gone over.

THE ATTRACTIVE POWER OF CHRIST

*A SERMON BY PASTOR CHARLES M. SHELDON

TEXT: "And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me." John 12: 32

THIS is a statement which no one could make except a person like Christ. The drawing power of any human being historically has been limited either to his own nationality, his own time, or a limited number of other nationalities and a limit in the matter of time. If we subject this statement to the test of historical fact we find it to be true. Just so far as Christ has been presented to the world in his true personality he has attracted all kinds of men, and it remains only for his disciples to present him fully to all the world to have his prophecy fully accomplished. Already the missionaries who have gone to the different countries of the globe count an increasing number of converts to Christianity. Men and women in Africa, Turkey, India, China, Spain, Japan, the Philippines, Mexico, Micronesia, are turning to Christ and calling him "Master." Recent religious conferences in India have called together Christian disciples from Hinduism by the thousand. In China the gatherings in many places are so large that the people cannot be accommodated in the church buildings. Many of the temples in Central China are being abandoned or actually turned over to Christian missionaries for Christian worship. Let us ask what are the sources of this drawing power of Christ.

Christ's Call to Sacrifice

Christ never said to men, "Come, be my disciple, and enjoy a soft, easy life." He said the opposite: "Except a man deny himself and take up his cross daily he cannot be my disciple." The church has always failed and always will fail when it begins to substitute self for sacrifice. In the long run men will be attracted more by the call, "Come and suffer," than they will by the call, "Come and please yourself." Humanity will never rally long around the cry of selfishness. All the great institutions of the world which are alive to-day and are shaping civilization have in them somewhere the sacrificial note. Christ's philosophy therefore penetrates deep down into springs of action. The call to amusement or to pleasure is superficial. The call to the cross is fundamental and enduring, and Christ will always draw men unto himself because he is constantly asking men to come out of the circle of self into the circle of others. Men are always attracted toward heroism. They are attracted toward hard things, and this is one of the first elements of Christian power and strength. The church which is not missionary in spirit is dead. A young people's society which does not magnify the missionary idea will always languish. The church will always be dead and useless which centers its worship, its services, its praying and its preaching around its building, or its choir, or its organ. In order to have drawing power it must have the spirit of Christ. The sacrificial note must be sounded before men's hearts will vibrate to anything worth while.

The Winning Power of Love

Christ's drawing power is explained by his love for men. No one ever questioned Christ's motives. They were so clear and unmistakable that they could not be questioned. He was not in public life for the money consideration. He had no earthly mission which could be called such from any human point of view. His sole motive in life was to save. He wept over Jerusalem, and looked upon the multitudes with compassion. This is a comparatively rare gift among men. There are hosts of men and women in our churches who are what are called "good people," who at the same time do not love humanity. Men may be found in every community who are courageous, who are true to their families, who never lie about their taxes, who are at the head of reform movements, who go in and out as reputable citizens, but who, at the same time, have no emotion or passion of affection for humanity. It seems as if it is one of the last virtues to be attained by the Christian as it is in one sense the largest virtue of all. To love all sorts and conditions of men, to pass the boundary of indifference and actually possess an enthusiasm for saving life, is not what would be called a common, everyday virtue, but Christ possessed it in the supreme degree, and it had a tremendous drawing-power. Men who will not yield to anything else finally yield to affection. They will not surrender their hearts to intellect; they will not be reasoned into the kingdom by argument, but they cannot withstand the constant pouring out of affection upon their lives. The minister who loves his people enough, everything else being equal, can accomplish pretty nearly everything he desires, whereas one who has great intellectual gifts as speaker, administrator and organizer, may fail completely without this love for men.

Another large reason for the drawing-power of Jesus is his positive program of life. The world into which he was born was a restless, discontented, unhappy world. It asked many questions about life and found few answers. Christ had no doubts. His answers to the problems of life are clear and positive. Men like the downright assertiveness which goes with positive knowledge. The man who really knows a thing always has great power with other men. Jesus threw light on four great subjects which are fundamental to daily life. He defined the nature of sin and made clear the great fact of forgiveness. Multitudes of men have been drawn to Christ along the track of forgiveness of sin.

Christ made clear the fact that there is a future. Men living in the dark, in fear of hopelessness, were drawn to him because he tore down the black curtain which hung between the present and the future and revealed the many mansions in the Father's house.

The Reality of God

Christ also made most clear and positive the doctrine of the Fatherhood of God. The world had been discussing fruitlessly the philosophies of the creation. Jesus accepted God as a person to be taken for granted like any reality, and defined the person as "Our Father." The positive acceptance of the actual life of God, as Jesus spoke of him, is worth centuries of argument. Man is defined by Jesus as a brother, and the brotherhood emerges from discussions, clear of the mists of entangling debate and warring argument, as clear-cut as a cameo, when Jesus says, "One is your Master . . . and all ye are brethren." If Jesus had rendered no other service to mankind except this, the world would owe him an inestimable debt. Men will never rally long around a question mark which has no answer. The rallying point must be around some kind of an answer in order to satisfy the heart and the mind, and in order to put men on their feet for service, for men will not battle in the great war of right and wrong unless they have positive convictions resting down upon their knowledge of the fact; so we may safely say the positive program of Jesus' life is a tremendous source of his attractive power.

Christ's attractive power is due to his supernatural personality. We get help from the human life of Jesus just as we get help from any human life which is of a high order, but, after all, he is attractive because he does more for us than any human being can do. We get help from men like Lincoln and Moody and Phillips Brooks, but after a certain point has been reached these men can not help us. We get no relief from these men when we want forgiveness of sins. They do not help us out when we are groping after the desire for the future. At a number of crises of human life all human help becomes insignificant. We need then the divine instead of the human. Christ is a Redeemer. Other men may help me but Christ saves me, and the human race is drawn to Jesus because he is different from us as well as because he is like us. He was "tempted as we are." In that respect we feel helped, but he was "without sin," and in that respect we feel even greater help. We need something stronger than humanity to lift us up and carry us through the stress of life. There come times in our human experience when nothing but God will answer, and at this point Christ answers our need and men are drawn to him and always will be drawn to hi because he is God in the flesh, made manifest f the redemption of the world. I am quite sure t world will never rally very long or very deeply in i enthusiasm around the best man that ever live There will always be a craving for something mor That craving is fully met in the One who came dow from above.

Let us therefore magnify the work of the churc We are here in this world to reveal Christ to me It is our business to reveal the real Christ. In th history of Christianity men have never been brough to Christ except through the agency of other me In some form or other men must behold Chri through the words or lives of his disciples. "Ho shall they hear without a preacher and how sha they preach except they be sent?" The time is com ing when the Christian church will realize its re sponsibility to present Christ to the world and the Christ will draw men up to himself.

We Are Drawn to Christ Himself

A beautiful thing about the statement whicl Jesus makes lies largely in the last word. Ou Christian life does not center about a philosophica treatise. It is not drawn up to a code of rules. I does not depend for its existence on an outwar organization, but the Christian disciple is drawn u to Christ himself. The loving and personal facto is what makes the Christian life real and eternal Our business as Christians is the best business i the world. Let us do our part so that God can use us in bringing men to Christ, so that he can draw them up to himself.

This is no losing cause
  We fight for every day,
This is no hope forlorn
  For which our prayers we pray,
But regnant, joyful,
  Triumphant is he,
The Christ who was and is
  And is to be.

March on, then, all ye hosts of God
  On earth below,
Fear not to face the world,
  To meet the foe!
Victorious are the forces
  That shall win
The soul's great conflict
  Over selfish sin.

O'er the wide universe
  This kingdom shall extend,
A kingdom that shall have
  All power, and know no end;
A kingdom ruled by love
  Till time shall cease,
The everlasting kingdom
  Of the Prince of Peace.

The Man Who Wrote "Thinking Black"

DAN CRAWFORD, for twenty-two years a missionary in the heart of darkest Africa, will be at the Northfield General Conference in August. He has recently returned for his first furlough, and the reception he has been accorded at the hands of the English people is only comparable to that received by David Livingstone.

The publication of his remarkable book, Thinking Black, has aroused the English people in a wonderful way. The piquant vivacity of its literary style has made a genuine sensation, and the freshness of its viewpoint—especially the wonderful interpretation of poetic emotion in the minds of untutored natives of the African jungle—has been equally a surprise and a delight to all readers.

But Dan Crawford himself is none the less interesting than his book. He is a fascinating speaker, being a poet, humorist and philosopher. His addresses are replete with stories of adventure and with characteristic lightning sketches of situations and individuals among the uncivilized black men of the dark continent.

DAILY MEDITATION

FOR EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR

BY REV. J. H. JOWETT, D.D.

SUNDAY, August 17. Psalm 106: 1-12. "The waters covered their enemies. . . . Then believed they his words." Their faith was born in a great emergency. A spectacular deliverance was needed to implant their trust in the Lord. They found no witness in the quiet daily Providence; the unobtrusive miracle of daily mercy did not awake their song. They dwelt upon the "special" blessing, when all the time the really special blessing was to be found in the sleepless care which watched over them in their ordinary and commonplace ways.

It is the old story. We are wanting God to appear in imperial glory; and he comes among us as a humble carpenter. We want great miracles, and we have the daily Providence. We see his dread goings in the earthquake, we do not feel his presence in the lilies of the field. We watch him in the smoke and flames of Vesuvius, we do not recognize his footprints in the little turf-clad hill that is only a few yards from our own door.

It is a great day when we discover our God in the common bush. That day is marked with glory when our daily bread becomes a sacrament. When we enjoy a closer walk with God, common things will wear the hues of heaven.

MONDAY, August 18. Exodus 16: 2-8. These people had been delivered from the perils of Jordan, but they had not faith enough to believe that God could deliver them from the perils of hunger. They thought they were safer by the fleshpots of Egypt than in the hands of Providence. The miracle of yesterday had been wasted; it had given them no inspiration for the life of to-day. The Red Sea had no message for the wilderness. The deliverance might just as well never have been wrought. Yesterday's providence had no voice.

And we, too, are akin to the children of Israel. Our murmurings begin when we forget our blessings. Repining cannot breathe in the air of remembered mercies. Praise is the sure destructive of complaint. When we are journeying through a wilderness we can nourish our hopes by recalling the wonders of the Red Sea. When we forget what God accomplished yesterday our hopes will droop like flowers in need of rain. "His love in time past." I must tread that radiant road again, and see how divine love met my necessities in days that are gone. Hope revives when we recall an experience.

His love in time past
Forbids me to think He'll leave me at last
In trouble to sink.

TUESDAY, August 19. Exodus 16: 9-15. "Ye shall be filled with bread; and ye shall know that I am the Lord your God." Here was an added providence in spite of the people's complaints. God gave them bread in spite of their thankless desire to return to the ignoble bondage of Egypt. But here is an awful issue; murmuring and ingratitude impair the moral sight, so that when the blessing comes we do not recognize it as the gift of God. Yes, a complaining soul loses its sight! When the manna fell, there was no psalm of praise, because they did not know it to be the King's gift. The Lord was working miracles of providence, and they did not see his hand.

That is the nemesis of unthankfulness, the loss of the perception of grace. In purely human relationships it is found that ingratitude is the agent of blindness. The man who is always murmuring becomes a cynic, and a cynic is a man who is wearing self-created blinders. The man who is never a eulogist can never be a discerning critic. Our sight is dependent upon our praise.

So it is in our relation to the Lord. If we come into his presence in manifold repinings we shall never see him. If we come into his presence in "the multitude of his mercies," heaven and earth will be seen to be full of his grace. Even the wilderness shall "rejoice and blossom as the rose."

WEDNESDAY, August 20. Exodus 16: 16-26. "Six days ye shall gather it." They were to gather in six days what would suffice for seven. On the seventh day there was to be a change of activity, to emphasize a supreme relation. On the seventh day they were to gather another kind of bread, in the fields of devotion, and in the immediate presence of God. On the seventh day the soul, liberated from all material quest, might journey into "another country," seeking richer merchandise, and become laden with the bounties of grace. The children of Israel were to stop gathering manna lest the manna should come to be everything and they forget the bread of life.
